2014 INTERIM REPORT

SUMMARY

The Turnpike and Pre-Turnpike roads project forms an element of the Cadw grant-aided medieval and post-medieval threat related assessment project.

This interim report summarises the initial phase of the project which consisted of a desk-based project to identify turnpike roads from easily accessible documentary sources and, where possible, to also identify pre-turnpike roads. The routes of the roads and associated features were mapped in Mapinfo and records were created for the HER.

The project is intended to increase understanding of this class of landscape feature, to provide information to enable their historic value to be sustained and to identify specific parts of roads that may warrant designation as Scheduled Ancient Monuments.

INTRODUCTION

Late 18th and early 19th century travellers in South Wales, particularly in Carmarthenshire and Ceredigion, frequently commented on the appalling condition of the roads. This was at a time when the condition of roads generally across England and Wales were improving as a result of turnpike trusts creating new roads and upgrading existing roads. Prior to the creation of the turnpike road system, most roads, lanes and tracks linked villages and small towns, long distance road travel was rare, and virtually impossible for wheeled vehicles. Some improvement was carried out by large landowners, but it was not until the creation of turnpike trusts that a co-ordinated road network came into being. By 1750 about 150 trusts had been established in England and Wales, rising to almost 700 by 1800 and over a 1000 in 1825.

Some of the early turnpike routes in south-west Wales were improvements to existing roads, but by the end of the 18th century new routes were being created and the older roads either retreated back into a local lane or track or were abandoned. Toll houses, gates and milestones were erected and new bridges constructed. Strategic routes, such as Thomas Telford's coach road to Hobb's Point at Pembroke Dock, were heavily engineered and received Parliamentary funding. During the second half of the 20th century and the 21st century sections of some turnpikes have themselves been bypassed and subsumed into the local road system.

This project forms part of a wider pan-Wales Cadw funded initiative to assess all classes of medieval and post medieval sites for scheduling enhancement. The project aims to investigate the medieval and post medieval road network and related sites, few of which are currently scheduled.

A study of the Roman road network previously been undertaken by Dyfed Archaeological Trust (DAT) (Schlee 2005), showed that many roads originally thought to be of Roman date, in fact originated in later periods. The research undertaken on Roman roads has not been matched by similar research on medieval and early modern roads, and they have not been mapped in any detail. This project will help address the research priority 'Transport Corridors' identified in the Industrial and Modern Wales section of Introducing a Research Framework for the Archaeology of Wales, which states that 'further study is needed to establish the significance of the canals, roads, railways and ports of Wales'. The main product of the first phase of the project is the creation of a database and associated MapInfo tables that can be accessed via the Historic Environment Record (HER).

Although the vast majority of the turnpike road system are still in use as public roads and are of little archaeological or 'monumental' significance, a few sections of turnpike roads have been bypassed by modern roads. Fewer still of these bypassed road sections are now within agricultural land, where they may survive sufficiently well to warrant scheduling. The Turnpike Roads Project will result in the identification of parts of the road system that may warrant statutory protection as scheduled ancient monuments, and a useful reference resource for assessing the impact of future infrastructure and other developments upon the known resource.

Potential threat comes from a variety of different sources. Road improvement schemes and maintenance programmes have the potential to damage or destroy early unrecorded elements of roads such as bridges, revetment walls and milestones. On turnpikes in current use there is the relentless damage caused by vehicle wear and tear and the constant threat of damage caused by accidents. Abandoned sections of road are subject to damage from farm machinery, off-road vehicles and erosion.

The Turnpike roads project provides an opportunity to update and enhance the representation of turnpike roads and their associated features within the regional HER. This will result in a useful data set and tool for studying, interpreting and understanding the development of the turnpike road system.

The digitisation of the turnpike road network in a GIS is perhaps more significant for what it can tell us about landscape change, and the historical development of transport links during the 18th and 19th centuries, and its associations with what went before and came after.

PROJECT AIMS

The overall aims of the project are:

- to identify turnpike roads from easily accessible documentary sources and where possible also identify pre-turnpike roads.
- to map the roads identified from documentary sources using GIS.
- to record the identified roads on the Dyfed HER.
- to identify those sections of road that have the potential for survival of early features, such as abandoned roads or turnpike roads downgraded to lanes and tracks, and verges of current main roads.
- to undertake field visits to selected sections of road to assess survival, condition and vulnerability.
- to enhance HER records for data gathered during field visits.
- to identify sites that are potentially of national importance and make scheduling recommendations.
- to produce a short report on the project.

Only the first three of these aims were addressed during 2014.

The research objectives of the project include:
- an application of definition, classification, quantification and distribution of these sites in south-west Wales
- assessment of the archaeological significance of these sites in both a regional and national perspective
- assessment of the vulnerability of this element of the archaeological resource,
- recommendations for scheduling of key sites
- enhancement of the Regional HER, making the information available through Archwilio and the Archwilio app.

METHODOLOGY

This project is loosely based on a pilot project undertaken by Gwynedd Archaeological Trust in 2013-14, and upon the previous threat related study of Roman roads undertaken on behalf of Cadw (Schlee 2004).

The desk-based study was designed to provide a dataset compiled from material held in the Dyfed Archaeological Trust Historic Environment Record (HER) and National Monument Record (NMR) along with other secondary sources.

No comprehensive study has been made to the physical remains of pre-turnpike and turnpike roads in south-west Wales, although there are some useful general works such as Roads and Tracks of Wales and Welsh Cattle Drovers, (Moore-Colyer 2001 and 2002) and specific studies such as 'The forgotten roads of Carmarthenshire' (Evans, 1985) 'The Early Effects of Carmarthenshire's Turnpike Trusts, 1760-1800' (Lewis 1967), and the Early Years of the Turnpike Trusts in Cardiganshire (Davies 2003) which offer more detail, but in limited areas.

Other information on the turnpike road network was obtained from the county histories for Pembrokeshire, Carmarthenshire and Ceredigion.

The primary sources were digital Ordnance Survey mapping (1st edition) and the Old series Ordnance Survey mapping.

Aerial photographic coverage of the area supplied under licence by Cadw provided additional information about the survival and form of the turnpike road network.

The vast majority of the network of turnpike roads still form part of the current road system. On the Old series mapping, Turnpike road routes are depicted with a thick and a thin line and 1st edition Ordnance Survey mapping have been plotted as linear features. With separate PRNs allotted to road lengths between significant settlements or road junctions.

Separate records have also been created where short lengths of former turnpike road have been bypassed by road improvements that have taken bends out of the earlier routes, or where new river crossings have been built. Some of these segments may survive as minor roads, road verges or laybys, others have been returned to farmland, survive as field boundaries, or have been built over. A new PRN was allocated when there was a significant change in the form or survival of the road. Standard HER database fields were used for recording the turnpike. Some of the more promising locations for surviving stretches of Turnpike road will be assessed in the fieldwork phase of this project.

Pre-turnpike routes described in secondary sources are often only described in relation to nearby settlements or landscape features that the route passes through. Wherever possible these have been plotted in relation to roads on the 1st Edition Ordnance Survey Mapping. Where written descriptions in secondary sources are the only available evidence it is possible that the GIS plotted routes are not the exact routes that the roads originally followed.

Some sections of pre-turnpike roads are no longer roads or tracks. Where the routes of Pre-turnpike roads (or parts) are known, these have been plotted in a Mapinfo GIS table. Sections of pre-turnpike roads that were later turnpiked have not been recorded separately. No prospecting for evidence of previously unrecorded pre-turnpike roads has been undertaken as part of this project.

For the plotted road routes, basic descriptions have been created to define the extent of each segment. Additional details attributing each segment to the appropriate Turnpike Trust, and details such as dates of construction will be added in due course, where this information is available in secondary sources. Additional detailed information may be available in primary sources, but extracting and collating this information into the HER is a task beyond the resources of this project.

Road infrastructure was included on the GIS mapping as this provides important contextual information for the road construction and phasing. Several categories of road infrastructure were recorded as spot data on the GIS. Milestones (M.S.) were generally only marked on OS 1st edition. The General Turnpike Act of 1766 made mileposts compulsory on all turnpike roads and on the Old series mapping turnpike mileages marked as numbered points are assumed to mark the locations of mileposts. It is interesting to note the difference in the locations of mileposts and milestones along the same stretches of roads represented on the Old Series and 1st Edition OS mapping, which presumably result from different repairs or upgrades of the roads.

Guide posts (GP), and some 'pickets' (Pkt.) (which are assumed to have some connection with road surveying and maintenance, and which are represented on the 1st edition mapping) were also recorded but have not been included in the HER as part of this project. A database of milestones produced by the Milestone Society was also used in the study but was not incorporated into the main database.

Only toll gates (T.G.) were generally marked on the Old Series OS mapping. The OS 1st Edition mapping generally records toll gates (T.G). During the project it was noticed that 'T.P', generally interpreted as identifying a 'turnpike', often appeared to indicate the location of toll houses or toll gates. 'T.P' indications were therefore included in plotting toll gates and toll houses. In addition, place and house names often suggest the presence of a toll house or gate on the OS 1st Edition mapping. Primary sources, especially the minutes of Trust meetings and newspaper articles mention tollgates and bars that are not indicated on historic mapping.

Dating turnpike roads

The main source of evidence for turnpike routes used in this project was the OS Old Series mapping. The Pembrokeshire maps were surveyed from 1809 to 1812, and published between 1818 and 1820, with some revisions in 1836 to 1842. Carmarthenshire mapping was surveyed between 1809 and 1820, was revised from 1829-30 and was published between 1830 and 1837. Ceredigion mapping was surveyed between 1810 and 1833, was partly revised in 1833 and was published between 1834 and 1837.

The Old Series mapping therefore provides a record of the extent of turnpike roads after the turnpike system had been in operation for around 40 to 50 years (in some areas) and most of the turnpike roads had been constructed or were under construction. On the Old Series mapping, turnpike road routes are depicted by 'shading' (effectively thickening) one side of the road along its length.

Comparison of the mapped data with documentary sources suggests that not all toll gates and toll houses are depicted.

The 'post-turnpike' era is represented OS 1st Edition mapping for Pembrokeshire, Carmarthenshire and Ceredigion which was published between about 1865 and 1890, having been surveyed from approximately 1854 onwards. On the OS 1st Edition mapping, both 'Main' roads and 'District' roads were depicted by 'shading' (effectively thickening) one side of the road along its length, making it impossible to differentiate between turnpike, main and district roads. Other details, such as toll houses and gates (presumably of turnpike roads that were still in operation) were, however, depicted.

A map illustrating communications in Carmarthenshire circa 1840 is included in the Carmarthenshire County History (Lloyd 1939) depicts the roads in use at that time based on information extracted from the commission of enquiry into the Turnpike Trusts undertaken in 1843.

Secondary documentary sources refer to a plethora of Parliamentary Acts (which lasted 21 years) and bills of various dates for the construction and maintenance of various roads. These references often do not mention the name of the Trust involved, and in many cases it would be necessary to return to the primary sources to establish clearer dates for the formation of several of the Turnpike Trusts.

The minutes of several Turnpike Trusts survive in County records offices. These provide additional detail about when specific lengths of roads were constructed or repaired, but few if any of these records span the entire life of the Trust. It is also often difficult to identify the place names by which stretches of road are referred to.

Although it is beyond the scope of this stage of the project to return to the primary sources to extract details for dates of road construction, where such evidence is clear from the secondary sources, it has been included in the HER descriptions for specific turnpike roads

RESULTS

Roads and routes through the Welsh landscape have changed and developed since prehistoric times. The routes followed between destinations have been influenced by many factors. The earliest and routes were influenced by factors such as geology, topography and groundcover, but obviously enough, another important factor is the location of settlements of all kinds and how these have changed and developed through the ages, along with the need to access natural resources and environments.

Roads are partly influenced by the routes established in preceding times. Through gradual erosion resulting from prolonged use and weathering, a simple track would eventually become incised into the landscape as a hollow way. This kind of route can only take so much traffic before it becomes impassable, necessitating the establishment of alternative routes and diversions, eventually creating "braided hollow ways" or extensive areas of erosion. A similar process of gradual erosion and route variance can be observed in the present day on popular walking routes in coastal and upland areas.

There are also numerous other influencing factors such as cost and engineering and transport technology, along with other factors that change and develop through time including political expediency at a national and local level, the demands of commerce, industrial and agricultural economics, and perhaps less obviously, influences such as land ownership, tourism, communication technology and social change.

The Roman military road network established during the occupation of Wales imposed a new network of routes through the landscape. These roads were primarily built for military purposes to link forts established in specific, often remote, strategic locations. The engineering capabilities of the Romans meant the chosen routes of these carefully constructed roads were less dictated by topography than prehistoric routeways. Following the end of Roman occupation in southwest Wales, some of the Roman roads routes did not prove useful to subsequent generations and fell out of use; others routes remained relevant and were adopted in part or in their entirety by road networks in later periods. The Cadw funded Roman Roads Forts and Vici Project has ascertained that in Dyfed, only 15% of Roman roads were found to be followed by the modern road network.

Pre-Turnpike roads

Due to quantity of material relating turnpike roads within Pembrokeshire, Carmarthenshire and Ceredigion, pre-turnpike roads have been excluded from this initial study. If resources allow, pre-turnpike road will be recorded inth the HER during phase two of the project.

Turnpike roads

Few roads before the 18th century were suitable for wheeled transport and most travel was by horseback. In 1555 the Highways Act was passed which placed responsibility for the upkeep of roads on individual parishes through the use of 'statute labour' known as 'corvee'. Each able-bodied person of a certain age was required to give six unpaid days of unpaid labour annually. Horses and carts could be lent to the road workers instead of undertaking the manual labour. In each parish two 'Surveyors of Highways' directed the necessary works. The unpaid work came to be known as 'diwrnod i'r brenin' (a day for the king), and was regarded as more of a holiday than a day's labour. (Davies 2003). For non-turnpiked roads this system remained the law until 1835 (Pritchard 1952, 15).

The quality of road maintenance depended on the resources available within each individual parish. Large, rural upland parishes had inherent problems maintaining a satisfactory road network. Local magistrates regularly brought actions against parishes if the work was not completed and the resulting fines were used to pay contractors to undertake the work that the parish residents had not completed. These simple roads eventually became inadequate to cope with increasing amounts of traffic and larger numbers of wheeled vehicles. The increase in wheeled traffic, which inflicted much damage to the roads, was at least in part a consequence of the development of agricultural and industrial production and commerce, including the demand for lime in industry and agriculture.

After the Restoration of Charles II in 1663 the government established turnpike trusts under the first Turnpike Act, to improve the road network. The trusts were usually made up of local gentry and other wealthy people who could invest money in road maintenance. To qualify as a turnpike trustee a person would have to have an income of £80 from rents, or real estate worth over £2,000. Investors obtained private acts to enable them to borrow money on the security of turnpike tolls, to use on road maintenance. Road bonds were issued with a fixed interest of about 5%. In addition to the road itself, a turnpike road was also expected to have set milestones along the route, and turnpike or toll gates houses were also constructed for the collection of tolls.

The Acts were sponsored by the landlords, who obtained the support of the local clergy and influential or rich tenants, together with local industrialists whose interests would benefit from the construction or repair of the roads. Each Act lasted 21 years, in the original hope that the roads could be built or repaired and the borrowed money repaid within that period. The renewal of the acts allowed the Trusts to develop new routes, or to abandon routes that were too expensive or unprofitable to maintain.

The work of the trusts was intended to supplement rather than replace the duties of the parish in maintaining the roads. If a turnpike trust failed to fulfil its duties the parish through which the road passed was still held responsible for the cost repairs. This remained the case until 1835.

In the early years of the Trusts, the tolls were collected by the trustees, but the system gradually changed. Toll gates were leased by auction to 'toll farmers' for up to three years. By doing this, the Trustees could know what their income for the year would be in advance. Once they had paid off their lease, the toll farmers could pocket any additional income from tolls within the period of the lease. This system was open to abuse, and the increasing burden of road tolls on the rural population eventually became one of the triggers for the period of social unrest known as the Rebecca Riots.

Tolls varied according to the amount of damage a particular vehicle type might cause to the road. Narrow-wheeled vehicles were considered particularly damaging. In the late 17th century, wheels less than 4 inches wide were prohibited from the roads. After 1773 traffic on wheels over 16ins wide were relieved from tolls. Narrow wheeled mail coaches were also exempt, along with all military horses, waggons and coaches, travellers to and from places of worship, funeral corteges, and vehicles transporting dung, lime and timber for agricultural purposes. The exemption for transporting lime was discontinued at the early 1800s, although typically, a lime cart would only have to pay one toll if its return journey could be completed in a 24 hour period.

By 1750 about 150 trusts had been established in England and Wales, rising to almost 700 by 1800 and over a 1000 in 1825. Some of the early turnpike routes in southwest Wales were improvements to existing roads, but by the end of the 18th century new routes were being created. By 1843 southwest Wales saw 23 trusts in operation, responsible for nearly 10,000 miles of roads in Carmarthenshire, Cardiganshire and Pembrokeshire.

Methods of road repair remained basic until the 19th century. The description left by a traveller journeying through South Wales in 1791, of the manner in which roads were repaired, is worth quoting:

"Their custom is to throw down vast quantities of huge stones, as large as they come out of the quarry, the size of a man's head, and many of them four times as big. These are spread over the road in heaps, perhaps a mile distant from each other, covering a great many yards of it. You must either drive over them, or wait till the people, who arc there with large hammers for the purpose, have broken them. This they only do into pieces the size of a pretty large flint . . . (Morgan 1795).

Many of the existing highways followed medieval or even Roman routes which, being intended primarily for travel by horse, were often too narrow or followed gradients unsuitable for wheeled transport.

In his report on the agriculture of Breconshire, John Clark (1794) describes the problem:

"There was a misfortune attending the original making of the turnpike roads throughout the whole …Wheel carriages were not then so common as they are at present: hence the advantage of level roads were [sic] but faintly seen. The gentlemen therefore, unfortunately did not go to the root of the evil; for, except where the hills were very steep, they contented themselves with widening the old road. This was the case of almost all the kingdom….and their descendants, at this day, feel, and are long likely to feel, the sad effects of this puny parsimony."

Charles Hassell (1794, p31) also mentions:

"One observation remains to be made with regard to the turnpike roads, and particularly the main road from Milford Haven to London; namely that it was found too narrow at first, being barely 24feet from ditch to ditch; and by scouring the ditches from time to time, it is now brought rather within its original width, which renders it extremely difficult and almost impossible to be kept in repair".

I therefore beg leave strongly to recommend to Gentlemen of the Old Trust, to widen that road to the breadth of 30 feet as soon as their funds will enable them so to do.'

Macadamised road surfaces incorporating crushed rock to create a better road surface were not adopted in Wales until 1826 (Lloyd, 1939, p 352).

Turnpike Trusts in Carmarthenshire

There appear to have been between nine and twelve Turnpike Trusts in Carmarthenshire. Varying amounts of readily available information about the activities of these trusts was identified at this stage of the project. Unless the secondary sources mention improvements made to specific roads by specific Trusts, it is difficult to establish exactly which Trusts undertook which road improvements. For example, there were apparently five different Trusts controlling the roads in and out of Carmarthen (the London quarterly review vol 74 1844). By the end of the 18th century the Carmarthenshire turnpike trusts, controlled approximately 330 miles of the country's roads.

The Carmarthenshire Main Trust

On 21 January 1763 the Main Trust became the first turnpike authority to be set up in South Wales when it brought a bill before parliament (passed on 7 March 1763) to repair the mail coach road from Trecastle Mountain on the Breconshire border, westwards via Llandeilo, Carmarthen, and St. Clears, to Tavernspite on the Pembrokeshire border.

By 1772, both the mail coach roads between London and Milford Haven had been enacted as turnpikes along their entire lengths through South Wales. One ran via Gloucester, Ross-on-Wye, Monmouth, Abergavenny, Brecon, Llandovery, Llandeilo, Carmarthen, Tavernspite, and Haverfordwest; the other from the ferry across the Severn, by Chepstow, Newport, Cardiff, Cowbridge, Neath, Swansea, Pontardulais, Llanelli, Kidwelly, and Carmarthen, where it linked with the inland route).

The Kidwelly Trust

In 1765, the Kidwelly Trust obtained Parliamentary approval to improve the lower mail coach road from Pontardulais via Llanelli and Kidwelly, to Carmarthen. In 1791, the South Wales Association for the improvement of roads (founded in 1789 by landowners and industrialists interested in the improvement of the coastal mail coach road between the river Severn and Milford Haven) threatened to take legal action against the parishes for the upkeep of the roads that the Kidwelly Trust had failed to undertake.

The Llandeilo and Llandybie Trust

Road improvements undertaken by the Llandeilo and Llandybie Trust were also included in the 1765 Act. In 'A History of Carmarthenshire' (Lloyd 1939) it is noted that the Landybie Trust undertook road improvements centred on Kidwelly. They also proposed maintenance of the road from Betws to the Glamorgan boundary near Penlle'r Castell, but this was never undertaken.

The Llandovery and Llangadog Trust

The Llandovery and Llangadog Trust was founded by Act of Parliament in 1779 to turnpike the road 'to and through the town of Llangadog, over Coed-yr-Artwydd, by Pont ar Lleche and Gwinfe Chapel, over the Black Mountain, by Cwm Llwydand by Gelli Veinon and Eskirn-y-Gelin, to the River Amman. This route was abandoned by 1784 in favour of developing other roads to service the growing Black Mountain lime industry. The Llangadog trust had about 41 miles of road with 13 gates and bars. The roads were maintained primarily to facilitate the carriage of lime.

The Llandeilo Rwnws Bridge Trust

The Llandeilo Rwnws Bridge Trust was established in 1784 to build the bridge at Llandeilo which was completed in 1787. It was a small trust; at the end of the 18th century it controlled only one mile of road and one toll gate.

The Carmarthen and Lampeter trust

The Carmarthen and Lampeter Trust was established in 1788. At the end of the 18th century it controlled 22 miles of road.

The Llandovery and Lampeter Trust

The Llandovery and Lampeter Trust was established in 1788. At the end of the 18th century it controlled 18 miles of road.

The Whitland Trust

The Whitland Trust was established in 1791.

The Three Commotts Trust

The Three Commotts Trust was established in 1792. Proposals to repair six roads located in the 'Great Mountain' and Llangendeirne areas were never undertaken.

The dates of establishment for the Carmarthen and Newcastle Turnpike Trust, the Tivyside Trust, the Brechfa Trust and the Main and Llanwrda Branch are at present uncertain.

Turnpike Trusts in Ceredigion

An act of parliament enabled the establishment of the Cardiganshire Turnpike Trust in 1770. The county was divided into two parts, the Upper or Aberystwyth District Road Board, and the Lower District Road Board. The dividing line was roughly between Aberaeron and Tregaron (Davies 2003).
In 1770 a turnpike running from Aberystwyth via Devil's Bridge and on to Shrewsbury was opened. Subsequent bills for other roads were obtained in 1791, 1812 and 1833. By 1843 there were 22 toll gates in Ceredigion.

Turnpike Trusts in Pembrokeshire

An initial unsuccessful attempt to address the poor state of the roads in Pembrokeshire was made when a voluntary society was set up in 1764. (Hassell 1794)

Turnpike trusts along lines of those in Carmarthenshire and Ceredigion were set up in Pembrokeshire, between 1771 and 1832. These included: the Fishguard Trust, the Milford Trust, the Pembroke Ferry Trust, the Cardigan Trust and the Tavernspite Trust.

The end of the Turnpike Trust system

It took a while for the trustees of the turnpike trusts to realise that the toll rates dictated by Acts of Parliament could not produce enough annual revenue to keep the roads in repair and to repay the interest on debts, and during the first half of the 19th century turnpike trustees were often unable to repay the capital invested in road maintenance and could not meet the annual interest payments due to subscribers. In these circumstances responsibility for road maintenance often reverted back to the parishes, causing much grievance.

Clauses in the early Turnpike Acts which exempted lime and coal from tolls, were in many cases repealed when the acts came up for renewal. This resulted in increasing tolls on lime (and other commodities). Some level of toll on lime transport was justified since it was the weight of this traffic which was to a large extent responsible for the poor condition and need for repair of the roads.

But along with increased tolls, there was a proliferation of tollgates and side bars and chains, located so as to make it increasingly difficult to undertake journeys that could avoid paying tolls.

Revenue was also increased by "farming" the tolls. The toll gates and bars would be auctioned or 'let' to the highest bidder on an annual basis. The 'toll farmer' then collected the tolls, paid his rent, and could keep any extra revenue at the end of the year as profit.

These, and other iniquities in the activities of the Turnpike Trusts, coupled with poor harvests (as a result of several years of bad weather) and increased taxes and rents, combined to make life very difficult for the rural population and lead to significant levels of rural poverty.

Eventually the accumulated resentments boiled over, resulting in a period of civil unrest from 1839 to 1843 which became known as the Rebecca Riots. The rioters organised many public protests and meetings, but also destroyed several toll houses and toll gates in protest at the level of tolls. Eventually military forces were deployed to quell the unrest.

Following the end of the Rebecca Riots in 1843, a Parliamentary Commission of Enquiry was held in 1844, resulting in the reform of the turnpike system in Wales. All the Turnpike Trusts within each county of Wales were amalgamated and tolls on vital commodities like lime were reduced by half.

By 1864 most of the Turnpike Trusts had been abolished and under the Highways Act of 1878 all 'disturnpiked' roads became 'Main Roads' and with the Local Government Act of 1888 responsibility for the maintenance of main roads passed to Highways Boards of local county and borough councils, funded by the rates.

HER ENHANCEMENT

Prior to this project, no turnpike roads were recorded on the Dyfed HER. There were 99 records relating to toll houses and toll gates, and 235 records relating to milestones.

So far 490 new HER records have been created as part of this project. This includes 69 new records relating to tollgates and tollhouses, the remainder are records relating to milestones and mileposts. Further enhancement of these records is intended in the second phase of this project.

142 records for turnpike roads relating to polyline plots of the turnpike road routes within Pembrokeshire, Carmarthenshire and Ceredigion have also been created as Mapinfo tables. Spot data records for these roads have also been created in Mapinfo. Further enhancement of these records is intended in phase two of the project so neither of these datasets has yet been uploaded to the HER.

95 Mapinfo records have also been created which identify segments of former turnpike road that are no longer main road routes. The majority of these are now minor roads, but some segments now traverse agricultural land or survive as field boundaries or access tracks, other segments of turnpike roads may survive in roadside verges. A number of the most promising stretches will be assessed in the next phase of the project.

Due to the number and complexity of the turnpike road network in the Dyfed region, the project will prioritise the record enhancement of turnpike road records. Polyline plots of pre-turnpike routes described in some secondary sources have been plotted, but records have not yet been created. A partial data set of 72 records of guide posts have been created in a Mapinfo table. These datasets will only be developed for the HER in phase two of the project if time allows.

Other features that are to some extent associated with the major road routes, including bridges, inns, smithies and post offices, have not been recorded as part of this project.
