Amman Valley Heritage Audit

1. Introduction

The information included in this report has been prepared largely from the Regional Sites and Monuments Records (SMR) for Carmarthenshire and Glamorganshire. These are publicly accessible records held by Cambria Archaeology, Llandeilo and The Glamorgan-Gwent Archaeological Trust, Swansea, two of the four Welsh Archaeological Trusts.

The content of the SMR databases in large part reflects earlier fieldwork and desk-top research undertaken by the Trusts and other archaeological organisations, particularly the Royal Commission for Ancient and Historic Monuments, Aberystwyth and Cambrian Archaeological Projects, Llanidloes.

The purpose of the report is to present the archaeological record for Amman Valley and immediately adjacent areas and to draw attention to the main historical themes that are suggested by the content of the Sites and Monuments Records. It is not intended to be a definitive history of the district. Hopefully, it could be a starting point for local groups to identify themes and places that may be suitable for interpretation in the future.

A key feature of the SMR is that all sites are given a unique record number, known as the Primary Reference Number (PRN). PRNs are quoted in the following text and the Site Gazetteer is arranged in PRN order. PRNs that are suffixed with the letter “w” signify that the site is located in West Glamorgan.

The site details in the Site Gazetteer have been extracted directly from the SMR and due to the sheer number of records included have not been edited at this stage. Errors in grammar and spelling are therefore present and in some instances researchers have used their own shorthand style and terminology, which may not make for easy reading.

2. The Landscape Background

Amman Valley covers a large and varied geographical area (Map 1 & 2). It includes the communities of Gwaun-cae-gurwen in Glamorganshire and Quarter Bach, Cwmaman, Ammanford, Llandybie, Betws and Llanedi in Carmarthenshire. The study area also includes portions of Bro Dyffryn Cennen and Llangadog to the north and Llanfihangel Aberbythych and Llanedi to the west.

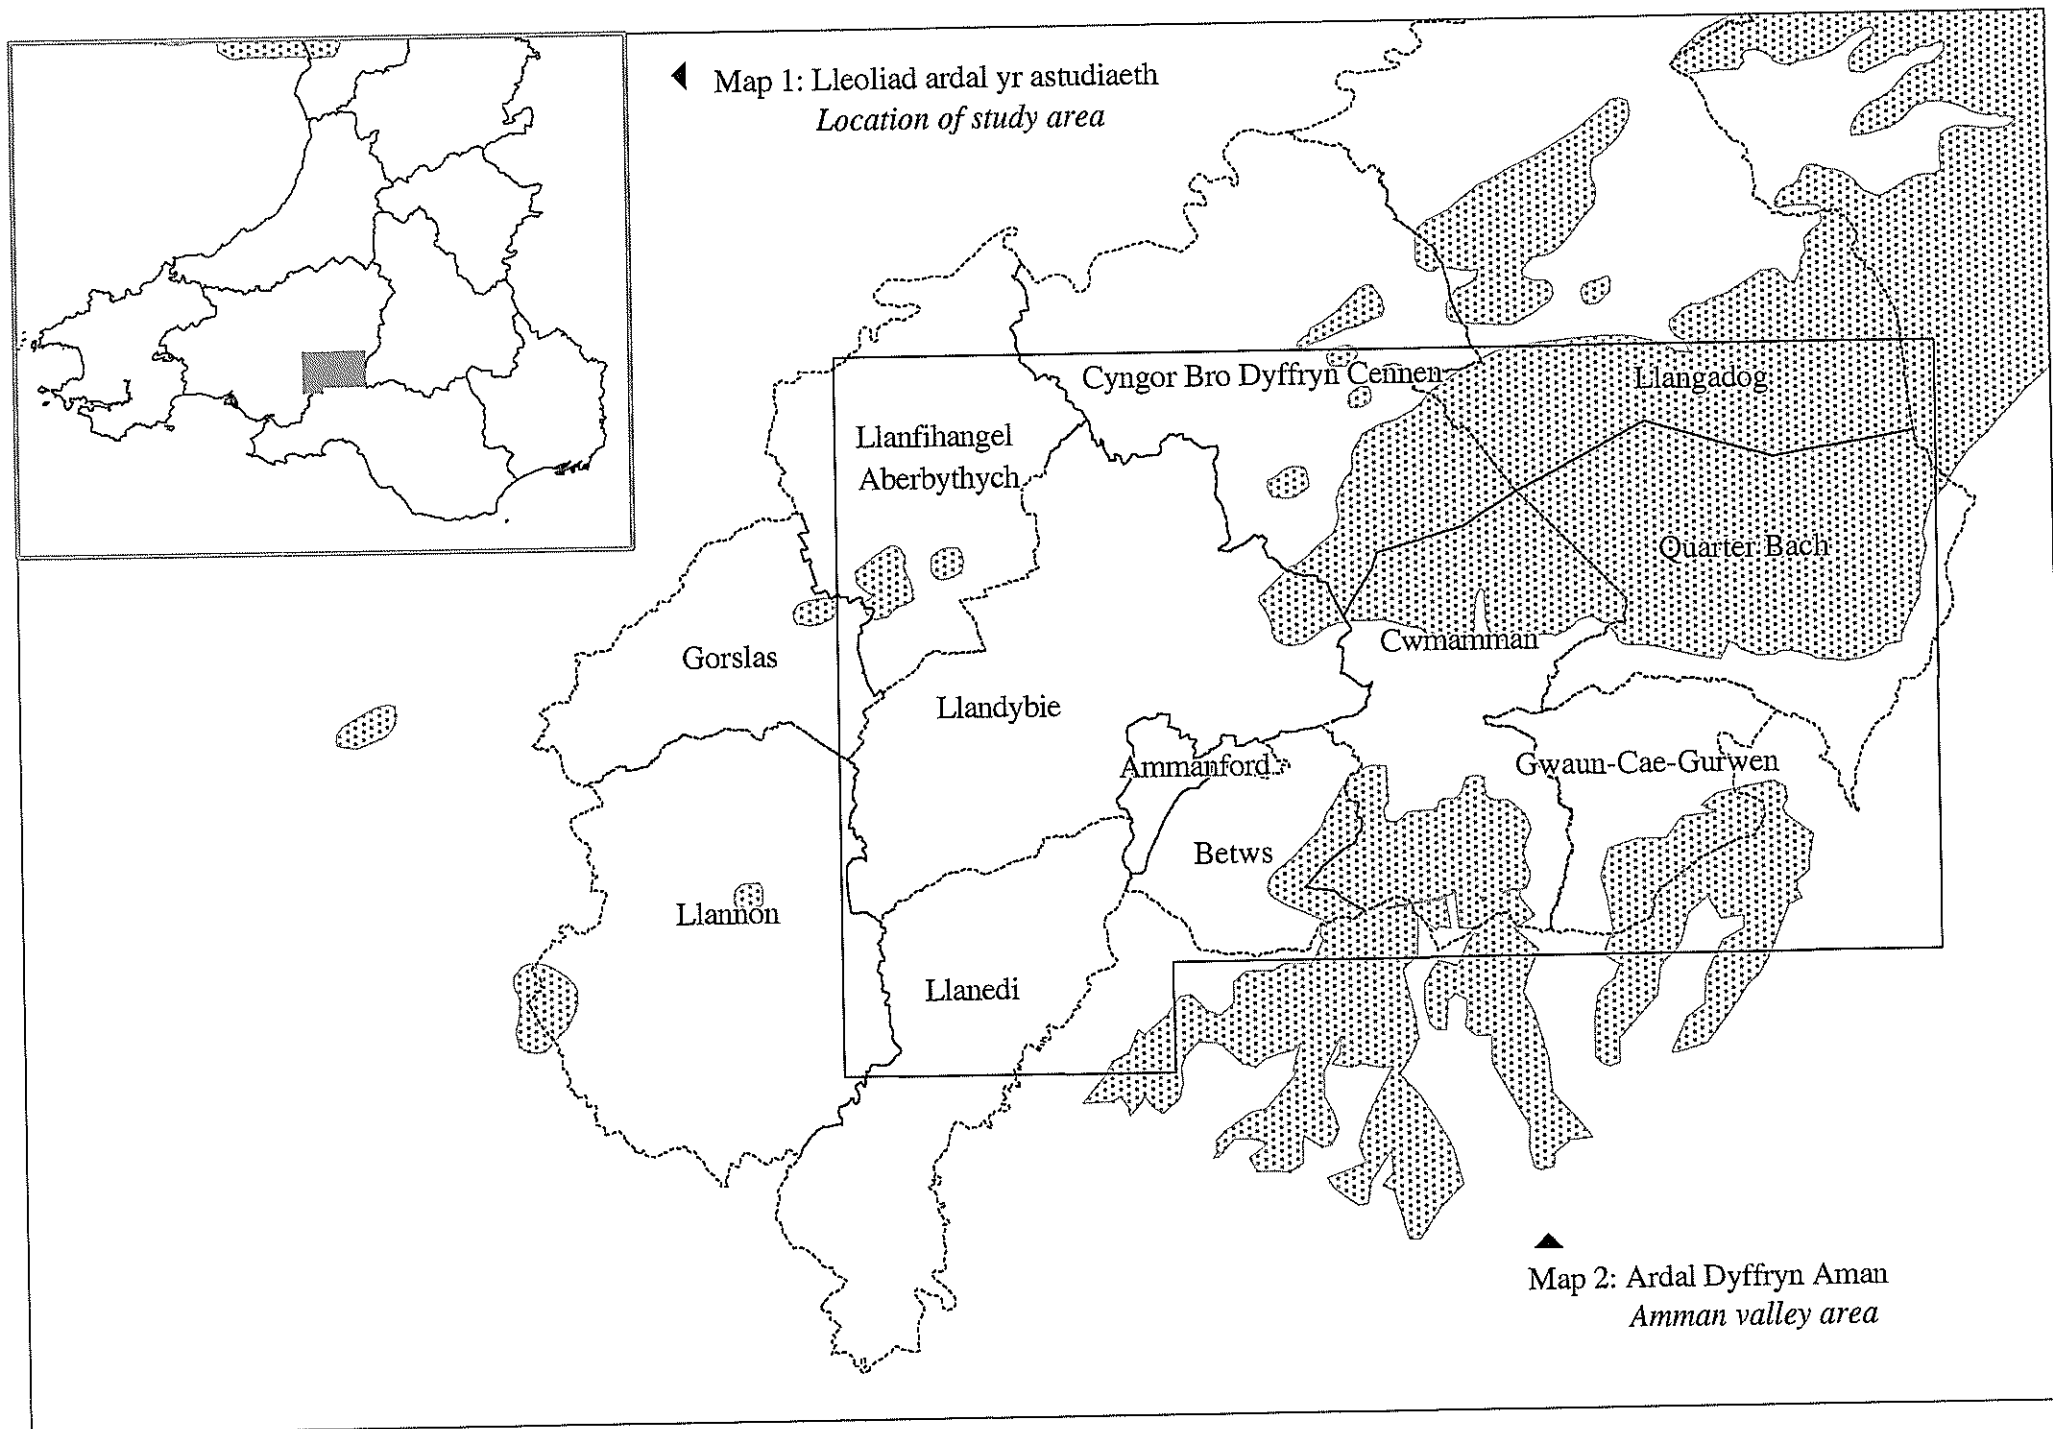

Geologically, the area includes rocks of the Carboniferous Upper and Middle Coal Measures Series, which include rich seams of anthracite coals and some iron ore, the exploitation of which has contributed much to the history of the valley. Hard Carboniferous Millstone Grits outcrop along the northern boundary of the area, which have long been quarried for silica sand and building stone. Beyond the Millstone Grit is a band of Carboniferous Limestone, which has historically been as a source of stone and lime for agricultural fertiliser.

The Aman river valley cuts east-west through the middle of the area and during the last century has provided both the focus of settlement in the district and also a route for the main road and rail links. The former mining settlements of the valley are typical of many the former mining villages of the South Wales coalfield.

A fairly narrow band of enclosed farmland exists along the lower slopes of both sides of the valley, separating the villages from the moorlands of the upland blocks found both to the north and south of the valley floor. The land rises away from the river in both directions, gradually at first, but with the slope increasing with altitude. The western end of the Black Mountain range lies to the north, achieving an altitude of 480m on Tair Carn Uchaf, whilst to the south is Mynydd y Betws, which rises to a maximum altitude of 371m at the southern edge of the area at Penlle'r castell.

The Afon Aman is a tributary of the Llŵchwr, which flows north – south through a broad valley creating a relatively gentle landscape in Llandybie and Llanedi communities. At the western edge of the study area, the Millstone Grit and Limestone ridge, which are interrupted by the Llŵchwr above Llandybie, once again gain altitude at Cilyrychen and form a noticeable physical barrier in the landscape west of Pentregwenlais.

The common land which forms the northern third of the area is part of the extensive moorland of the Black Mountain range which is now included in the Brecon Beacons National Park.

3. Archaeology by period.

3.1 Palaeolithic 250,000BC – 10,000BC (Map 5)

It is possible that bones (PRN815) found at the Pantyllyn or Craig-y-Derwyddon caves near Llandybie in the 19th century were a rare find of evidence for very early human activity in the area, during the last ice age. Unfortunately, many of the human bones found were destroyed at the time, and human skulls taken away and later lost. Animal bones found within the cave at the time included wild boar and elk. A hyena's tooth found in Dinas cave, Llandybie (PRN 7522) is also a reminder of how different the flora and fauna of the district must have been over 10,000 years ago.

3.2 Mesolithic (10,000BC – 4000BC)

During Mesolithic times, it is possible that this remote and mountainous district was a periodic hunting area for communities based further to the south. The people of this time were hunter-gatherers, and moved from place to place rather than living in settled communities. As they didn't live in permanent settlements or bury their dead in graves we can easily identify they can be difficult to identify in the archaeological record. The clearest evidence of their presence is usually the flint tools they have left behind, or scatters of flint flakes at sites where those tools were fashioned. There are no current recorded find of Mesolithic artefacts.

3.3 Neolithic (4,000 – 2500BC) (Map 5)

Although the archaeological evidence for this period in the area is limited, a number of sites of possible Neolithic date are recorded and show it likely that some settlement had occurred by this time. The Neolithic was the age of the first farmers. For the first time in this country, settled communities tied to the land developed. Perhaps the most notable evidence of these societies are their religious monuments, such as stone circles and chambered-tombs. A former stone circle site is recorded at Llandybie (PRN 640) and a Neolithic flint axe (PRN 844) has been found at the school playing fields at Ammanford.

3.4 Bronze Age (2500BC – 800BC) (Map 6)

Most of the relatively large number of prehistoric monuments recorded within the study area are Bronze Age in date. A significant number of Bronze Age funerary cairns are found on the high ground at the northern and southern extremities of the area. They are typically sited just below the top of the hill so that they would appear prominent on the horizon to anyone looking upslope from the valley, such as at Tair Carn Uchaf and Tair Carn Isaf on the western flanks of Y Mynydd Du. The heaps of stones which form these cairns would have been placed over a cremation burial or burials and they may have been intended to serve as territorial markers as well as graves.

On Mynydd y Betws, there are several clusters of cairns, which may represent the cemeteries of long-lost communities, including the Henrhyd Cairns, which are Scheduled Ancient Monuments (PRNs 863-6; SAM Carn 178).

As well as cairns, there are examples of probable Bronze Age standing stones and a ring- barrow at Penycoed, on the western boundary of the study area (PRNs 4866, 11599 & 13260, around SN660154). Another standing stone, which is known locally by an unusual name is Llech yr Aberth (The Sacrificial Stone - PRN 4879), is one of several found on Mynydd y Betws. Archaeological excavation has shown that Bronze Age standing stones are usually associated with cremation burials, which may be made in the vicinity of the stone.

A burnt-mound or hearth, a typically Bronze Age site type, is recorded at Cwmffrwd (PRN 7805; SN675146). Burnt mounds consist of crescent-shaped heaps of burned stones and charcoal, obviously the product of heating large quantities of stone. They are usually found next to watercourses and it is generally thought that they result from heating water for some purpose. What that purpose was has never been satisfactorily explained, but suggestions range from cooking food to making sweat lodges.

A number of finds of Bronze Age artefacts have also been recorded in the area, including bronze axe heads from Pantyllyn (PRN 818) and Ferdre, Trapp (PRN 12193).

A major Cadw-funded project is currently under way, which involves visiting and reassessing all recorded prehistoric funerary and ritual monuments. This will greatly enhance the SMR record and the information available to the public in relation to all these monuments in the near future.

3.5 Iron Age (800BC – 43AD) (Map 7)

There are a number of sites in the Llandybie area that are of Iron Age date, or possible Iron Age date. A hillfort is known at Penygarn (PRN641), another possible fort at Waunycastell, Llandeilo Fawr parish (PRN799) and a destroyed fort at Tireinon, Llandybie (PRN851).

One fascinating link with the traditions of the Iron Age Celts survives in the mention of Amanwy (Amman) in the ancient Welsh tale of the hunting of the Twrch Trwyth, by King Arthur and his men

3.6 Roman (43AD – 410AD) (Map 8)

There are no known sites associated directly with Roman occupation in the area, such as forts or roads, but finds of Roman coins in the area show that Roman influence was felt. A Roman coin hoard was found in the late 18th century at Forge Llandyfan (PRN811). Several copper coins were found at Carreg Cennen castle in 1845 (PRN4002). During the early 20th century there was a find of a coin of the Emperor Maximianus (286-310AD) (PRN654) and during the late 20th century bronze and silver coins were reported from Maes Dewi, Llandybie (PRN13183).

3.7 Dark Ages (410AD – 1092AD) (Map 9)

It is probable that Dark Age communities existed in the Amman Valley and exploited the extensive mountain pastures of the district. We know that in pre-Norman times, that the maenor was an important unit of economic and political division. In the Lichfield Gospel Book, which dates to the 9th century AD and was originally kept at Llandeilo Fawr church, very important documentary evidence survives for the existence of a Maenor Meddynfych in the area of the parish of Llandybie. The name of Maenor Betws was also known during later medieval times. It may well be therefore that some ecclesiastical parishes, such as Betws and Llanedi, are based on these old Welsh maenor units. Ecclesiastical sites are often the only identifiable link we have to this period, but some local communities, such as Cwmaman Community, are relatively new creations and have no ancient parish church.

The activities of one Celtic saint, St Illtyd, are recalled in the designation of one of the footpaths across Mynydd y Betws into Glamorganshire as St Illtyd's Way.

3.8 Medieval (1092AD - 1540AD) (Map 10)

Political boundaries

During the Medieval period, the area was on the southern border of the commote of Iscennen, within the territory of the princes of Dinefwr. To the south of Mynydd y Betws lay the Norman lordship of Gwyr. Llanedi lay within the medieval commote of Carnwyllion, an ancient unit that became a division of the Hundred of Kidwelly during Norman times.

There is little physical evidence of medieval settlement in the area today, but some local placenames give hints of where that settlement might have been. To the south of the Aman, placenames such as Hafod and Hendy hint at the use of Mynydd y Betws from early times, probably as an area of upland pasture or hafod.

By medieval times, it is likely that the land along the Amman valley was well established farmland. It is likely that the general settlement pattern was one of dispersed farms and small hamlets the earliest villages may have been found around the parish churches of Betws, Llandybie and Llanedi,

The hills either side of the valley would have had much more open mountain pasture than at present. These hills are dotted with the remains of the huts and houses of medieval and later shepherds and cowherds, who would spend the summer months with their families and animals on the hill. These are the hafodydd of medieval times. Records exist¹ which show that in the 14th century the traditional summer pastures of Ferdre Fawr (near Trapp), the farm of Castell Carreg Cennen, were in the wastes of Cwm Pedol. This arrangement was doubtlessly repeated across the whole district, with lowland communities enjoying rights of common grazing on the adjacent hills.

North of the Amman, a host of interesting names provide echoes of former times. Tir Syr Walter and Tir Powell Ddu tell us something of the identity of early landowners in the district. Hendre Fawr may be the site of an early farmstead or hendre. Cynghordy (the House of Council) is a name found elsewhere in the county and which has distinct medieval overtones. It may have associations with an early manorial court of some kind and a local tale that nearby Trecynllaeth farm was the site of a gallows where felons were put to death may be significant. Neuadd still exists as a farm name, but this was a hunting lodge of the princes of Deheubarth during medieval times.

A number of castles in the area remind us of less settled times in the past. On the Glamorganshire side of the county boundary on Mynydd y Betws, is the medieval castle of Penlle'r Castell. Two other medieval castles in the area are the little known motte castle at Tirydail, Ammanford, and the dramatic hilltop fortress of Carreg Cennen.

During later medieval times, however, the need for large military castles faded and the rise of the landed gentry saw the development of large private estates, with their mansion at the heart, rather than the castle. The great estates of eastern Carmarthenshire included that of Derwydd, Llandybie, which had historic associations with the family of Dinefwr, at one time the royal family of the Kingdom of Deuheubarth. Another Llandybie house of historical interest is that of Glynhir, which was owned by the DuBuisson family during the 19th century, who had a profitable knife factory close by.

3.9 Post Medieval: Industry (1540AD – 1900AD) (Map 11)

Lime

Limestone was quarried for many centuries on the Mynydd Du and burned in kilns on the mountain to produce lime to fertilise the land. Lime from the area was bought by farmers from as far away as Ceredigion when the industry was in its heyday. Llandybie was one of the main centres of production by the 19th century but lime was produced along the whole length of the limestone belt that runs across the northern margin of the area.

Lime was also an important material in the iron smelting process and was also quarried for that purpose. This was true also of the millstone grit and silica sandstones that lie between the coal measures and the limestone and were extensively quarried and crushed in Carmarthenshire.

Coal

Most coal mined in the Amman valley before the Industrial Revolution was probably extracted by local people for their own use - either as domestic fuel or for limeburning. Early coal workings were simple affairs, the parish history of Betws records that even in the early 19th century it was common for gunpowder to be used to blast the coal, ignited by shovelfuls of hot coals thrown down into the workings from the surface.

The nature of the coal seams and the topography in the Carmarthenshire anthracite areas is suited to driving 'drifts', locally known as 'slants' into the hillside, following the dip of the coal seam. This was particularly true of the earlier and smaller collieries, which usually went after easily accessible coal.

"Hushing" may also have been used by early miners, namely the technique of letting dammed water flow downhill to wash away the topsoil and expose seams which outcropped close to the surface. The "Gwter Fawr" at Brynmanan may have been created by such a process over 150 years ago.

Deeper reserves were eventually worked by deep mining methods, but no deep mines now work in the anthracite coalfield.

The expansion of the industry can be traced on the three editions of the Ordnance Survey 1:10560 map series published in 1891, 1901 and 1907.

Great consideration went into the development of some early collieries in the Amman valley, probably the most important of which was a boat level opened at Brynllloi, Glanaman. This mine operated during the 1750's and consisted of a level driven into the hill, which was then made into a subterranean canal, connected to pillar and stall workings at the coalface.

It was Carmarthenshire anthracite that would establish Welsh coal as an internationally acclaimed fuel and would lead to a new impetus for expansion within the industry. Much of the credit for this goes to a Yorkshireman named Edward Cleeves, owner of the Cross Hands Colliery Company and known as "the father of the anthracite industry." His Gwaun-cae-gurwen Colliery became the first colliery to introduce the mechanical breaking, sizing and washing of coal. Cleeves travelled widely advertising his product, which won acclaim at European Trade Exhibitions at Amsterdam (1883), Antwerp (1885), Barcelona (1888) and Paris (1889).

One of the new markets opened up during this period was the market gardening industry of the Netherlands, anthracite coal proving ideal to heat its hothouses, whilst the invention of an anthracite burning stove in Scandinavia in 1880 as well as new developments in central heating added to the overseas domestic fuel market, particularly in France, Germany and Italy. Anthracite was seen as a fuel suited best to the closed ovens or fires of new central heating systems, rather than for burning on an open hearth. It was rarely used as a household coal outside the anthracite coalfield. The new markets meant that the period 1887-1902 saw almost a 300% increase in the output of the South Wales anthracite collieries, half of the coal going for export.

The dangers of working underground were ever present and many lives were lost in the Amman Valley collieries. However, the anthracite collieries were less troubled by gas explosions than those working the bituminous coals of the Glamorganshire valleys. The worst recorded single accident in the district occurred at the Garnant Pit in 1884, when 10 men lost their lives.

Iron & Tinplate

Iron ore present in the coal measures was used until the 18th century to produce iron locally and elsewhere in the county.

The skilled industrial workforce of the Amman Valley, the railway and the proximity of large coal reserves encouraged associated industries to set up in the valley. By the late 19th century the Amman Valley Ironworks was operating near Brynaman.

During the peak of the industrial period, the tinplate industry boomed in Carmarthenshire, particularly the Llanelli area. The Amman valley saw several tinplate works develop during the later 19th century. By the opening of the 20th century, both the Raven Sheet Steel Works and the Garnant Tinplate Works had been built within Glanamman; handily located alongside the railway line.

Brickmaking

Fireclays were often found associated with the coal seams of the district and these were exploited by many collieries during the 19th and 20th centuries in order to manufacture bricks. Often these bricks are stamped with the name of the colliery that produced them, such as “Ammanford Colliery.”

3.10 Post Medieval: Non-Industrial (1540AD – 1900AD) (Map 12)

Farming

There is no doubt that the lands along the Amman Valley floor and the lower slopes of the valley sides have been farmed for many centuries, possibly even thousands of years. The farmed land has also extended up the tributary valleys of the River Amman that flow from the high ground either side of the valley.

Despite the growth and retreat of industry during the past 150 years, much of the Amman Valley has never lost its rural atmosphere and outside the narrow strip of urban development along the valley floor, the land continues to be farmed. Indeed, a striking aspect of the history of the area is the close links between the industrial population and the land; before the industrial boom of the late 19th century many amongst the rural population spent at least part of their working lives engaged in coal mining and, when the industries of the valley were in full production, many of their workers kept in touch with the land, by keeping a small plot of land on which they could keep a cow or a few pigs as an insurance against hardship. The fact that a great number of the immigrants into the valley came from rural Wales, and were very familiar with country ways, made this all the easier.

The biography of David Williams, Cwmgarw, Brynaman describes perfectly an example of the collier-farmer in the pre-industrial Amman Valley;

“He was at the roots of everything - it was he who cut the coal near Blaenwaun, he would raise it, he would put it on the back of the little horse, he would take it to

*Blaentwrch to burn the lime, he would bring back the lime, he would spread it over the land... so it was he who made things grow on the barren land of Cwmgarw.*²

Many of the early coal mines on Mynydd y Betws were small workings opened by local landowners and farmers. It was common for farmers in the valley to send their sons to work underground when work was slack on the land, but there remained times of year when all hands were required at home, particularly around the harvest period. At such times coal mining would slacken, and temporary employment would be sought on the land.

The communal effort to gather the harvest was undoubtedly an ancient and important tradition. The whole community would join together to cut and bind a field as quickly as possible. The harvest would be followed by a 'reaping festival' of song, games and beer, for although the harvest meant a great deal of physical effort, but also an excellent opportunity for socialising and enjoyment. Although as many as 15-20 young boys and girls would be seen reaping a field, great pride was taken amongst the more experienced reapers, determined to cut the crop evenly and as close to the ground as possible. In the mid-19th century, David Harries of Cwm Nant Garnant was considered to be the area's champion reaper³.

Settlement has pushed onto the old commons of the Black Mountain and Mynydd y Betws during recent centuries. The mountain fringes are characterised by small cottages and farms carved out of the mountain wastes. The later settlements are often given away by the rectangular shape of their fields, best seen on Mynydd y Betws at Plas y Coed and Gelli Fawr, above Cwmgors. However, Lluest, on the study area boundary north of Brynaman is a name that suggests a fairly early enclosure of mountain ground. The term lluest is a medieval one, referring to a temporary encampment, but between the 16th and 19th centuries, lluestau were either dairying or shepherding stations on upland commons, characterised by a small cottage and a parcel of land enclosed from the mountain and improved.

Over many centuries, shepherds and cowherds have turned their flocks and herds out onto the Black Mountain commons, and before the 19th century, would usually stay on the commons with the animals. The foundations of the huts and enclosures they used can still be seen dotted across the commons, particularly in the shelter of small stream valleys. A similar picture is seen on Mynydd y Betws also.

Shepherds have always had to bring their flocks down from the commons at the end of the summer grazing season and return them to their rightful owners. To this end, the whole of the Black Mountain commons are ringed by sheepfold complexes, some of which remain in use, usually located near the 'mountain gate' or the point where old parish roads run onto the common. An example can be seen just north of Abernantglas, Twynmynydd.

Communications

Although the main focus of coal mining during the first quarter of the 19th century was around Llanelli, the potential of the northern anthracite coalfield was widely appreciated. The development of the coal resources of the area, as well as general trade, was however impeded by the poor communications routes into the valley.

The old trackways across the mountains to the north and south were not ideal trading routes, although before the 19th century, local produce was carried as far as Llandeilo, Swansea and Neath to be sold at fairs and markets (it must be remembered that Ammanford did not exist as a town until after the mid-19th century). “Ffordd Castell Nedd” (Neath Road) and “Ffordd Abertawe” (Swansea Road) were the names given to two of the tracks which crossed the old ford at Henrhyd on Mynydd y Betws.

The first improvement in communications came with the building of the Turnpike Road, from the west, into the upper Amman Valley in 1817. The Turnpike roads of West Wales were to become despised by the common people by the 1830's, although it must be noted that they were often the first decent roads to be built in some areas. This arose due to the fact that toll-gates were set up to collect tolls to finance their building and provide profit for the companies which were responsible for their construction. The tollgates were the focus of the Rebecca Riots during the period 1839-43. In 1819, a road was built between Brynaman and Llangadog, improving access into the eastern part of the upper Amman Valley.

A great impetus to develop the Amman valley coal reserves was provided in 1835, when anthracite was successfully used as a fuel in the open-hearth iron smelting process. This resulted in an increase in both the demand for anthracite and iron smelting in Carmarthenshire.

It was not long before the Amman Valley gained its first rail link, when the Llanelli Railway reached Ammanford, via Pontarddulais, and by 1840 its Garnant Branch had extended the network eastwards along the Amman Valley as far as Brynaman, giving this hitherto underdeveloped sector of the anthracite coalfield direct access to the Carmarthen Bay ports. In 1864, the Swansea Vale Railway opened to Brynaman, providing a direct link between the Amman Valley collieries and the port of Swansea. It is said that the Amman Valley line was the busiest single line railway in the world when the local collieries were in full production during the early 20th century.

During the later 19th century, the favoured location for developing new collieries was as close as possible to a railway, but even collieries relatively distant from the main lines were often provided with tram links. In the Amman Valley, for example, the Cawdor No.1 pit (later Blaengrenig Mine - PRN 30622), located high up on Mynydd-y-Betws, was provided with a 2km long tramway link to the Garnant branch of the Great Western (formerly Llanelli) Railway.

Growth of villages

With the exception of Llanedi, Betws and Llandybie, where parish churches may have been the foci of small villages, none of the settlements along the length of the Amman valley can be shown to have existed before the 19th century. Even the town of Ammanford was no more than a very small collection of cottages, known as Cross Inn, as recently as the 1840s.

The rise in population after 1850 was quite dramatic, and purely the result of improved communications and rapid industrial development. Nevertheless, these industrial settlements developed as fully fledged, self-supporting towns and villages, offering a full range of commercial and cultural opportunities to their inhabitants. Even after years of decline, evidence of former glory is to be seen everywhere, in the public, religious and commercial buildings of the valley – the built heritage of the district.

Cultural wealth

With most of the industrial population coming from other Welsh-speaking districts, the industrial period was marked by a flourishing of cultural activity that included traditional expressions such as poetry, eisteddfodau, y cwrw bach and a lively nonconformist heritage. The cultural wealth of the valley created many literate and eloquent figures that rose to prominence as poets, preachers and politicians.

In the pre-industrial communities of the valley, there were means and ways of receiving services and favours without resorting to the use of money. Payment for agricultural labour was often made in kind and not infrequently in home-brewed beer. This gave rise to the tradition of the cwrw bach (literally ‘small beer’). Home brewed beer or porter could be used to pay for services at the cobbler’s or tailor’s shop, or as a repayment for the favours of neighbours. But just as importantly, as testified to by the renowned Amman Valley poet Watcyn Wyn, the cwrw bach (sometimes known as y meth) was also an institution that helped to make life more bearable and neighbourly in a community that was generally poor in terms of worldly goods. The weak beer brewed was a fairly innocuous drink, but brought neighbours together to relax and discourse. The cwrw bach became an important preparatory school for those with a talent for performing; storytelling; poetic competitions and sing-songs could all arise out of one of these gatherings. Sometimes medd (mead) was brewed; a more respectable brew, but also somewhat stronger than the usual fare⁴.

In relation to the industrial community of the Amman Valley, comment must be passed on the importance of the bond formed between industrial workers in the face of their daily hardship, a bond that was carried into their loyalty to their trades union. Industrial disputes in the 19th and 20th century would almost invariably lead to the workers withdrawing their labour and going on strike. Many walkouts were quickly resolved, but strikes could carry on for weeks or months, as happened in the General Strike of 1926 and the Miners Strike in the mid-1980s. The comradeship of the colliers and their families meant that strikers were prepared to face great hardship to win their case, and community would invariably rally around to support the strikers.

The poetical and literary tradition of the Amman Valley ranks amongst the most notable in Wales. The industrial development of the area brought in fresh blood and ideas and, fortunately, most of the immigrants were from other parts of Wales which meant that industrialisation enhanced and strengthened the existing traditions of the valley, making the Amman Valley a stronghold of Welsh culture. The noted 19th and 20th century bards Watcyn Wyn, Gwydderig, Amanwy, Gwili and Nantlais all lived and worked in the area, and all contributed greatly to its cultural life. Many of their works refer to people or places in the valley.

Perhaps the most striking fact is that these renowned poets and academics all came from humble beginnings, worked as colliers and were largely self-educated, honing their poetic skills in the workplace or in each other's company.

Chapels

Before the industrial age local people would worship either at Betws parish church or elsewhere in the parish of Llandeilo Fawr. Nonconformist causes began appearing in the district during the 18th century, with famous names associated with early Nonconformism and the Methodist revival associated with some developments. Stephen Hughes, the famous Puritan known as "The Apostle of Carmarthen", often preached in the Llanedi area during the period of suppression of Nonconformism during the late 17th century. The early Methodists Peter Williams and Howell Harries also preached locally during the mid-18th century.

By the end of the 18th century, the Baptists and Independents were well established across the whole district. Small causes that began in farms and barns flourished and built their own chapels, but the rising population of the 19th century demanded larger and more numerous chapels. Many of the fine chapels built during the industrial period still stand in the valley as reminders of a very different society to that of today.

Entertainments

In a society such as that of the Amman Valley during the 19th century, where industrial and agricultural societies were so close, and traditional Welsh culture so dynamic, the outpouring of cultural activity in all forms was remarkable; in terms of literature, poetry, song, music and theatre, the valley was alive.

Chapels and Miners Halls were ready stages for organised events, with local eisteddfodau commonly held, but the homes and inns of the district were also important platforms for such skills to be honed.

Across the Amman Valley, through the Sunday School and the Band of Hope (Gobeithlu) the chapels made their contribution to the cultural wealth of the district, giving excellent grounding in the choral tradition, greatly helped by the teaching of Sol-ffa music. Collieries and other industrial works often developed choirs and brass bands from amongst the workforce, which were supported with great fervour and pride by their colleagues and local communities and which often travelled widely to perform and compete in eisteddfodau. The Cwmaman Silver Band drew a following from across the district. The brass bands were called upon to provide musical accompaniment for Sunday School marches and Trade Union rallies alike. There were also a number of amateur dramatic societies, such as the Calfaria Chapel society and the Cawdor society, both of Garnant.

The 20th century also brought attractions such as Glanamau's first cinema, held in the Palace Cinema, a corrugated iron building. The Miners Hall between Glanamau and Garnant and the Garnant Constitutional Club were both typical symbols of the social side of life in a South Wales mining community.

Sport also flourished in the growing industrial communities of the valley, with rugby, football, cricket and boxing being followed by the growing population, helping to forge a community identity amongst families which had come to the Amman Valley from many parts of Wales, and beyond.

Schools

The earliest knowledge we have of schooling in the district is associated with the educational efforts of local Methodists. During the 1750's and 1760's, Gruffudd Jones' Circulating Schools were held for a time at Cwmpedol and Tir dan yr heol⁵. Sunday schools were also periodically held at local farms.

By the end of the 19th century, both Glanamau and Garnant had their own county schools and several purpose built denominational Sunday Schools were located in Glanamau village.

3.11 Modern (1901-2003AD) (Map 13)

A section is included in the gazetteer of Modern sites and buildings. This serves as a reminder that archaeologists are interested in all evidence of the past, including very recent developments, including housing, communications, leisure and industry. Recording and understanding the physical manifestations of such recent human activity is of great interest in itself, but also helps us interpret the landscape more effectively.

4. Present Interpretation (Map 3)

4.1 Panels

Cambria Archaeology has been involved with researching and producing heritage panels at the following locations.

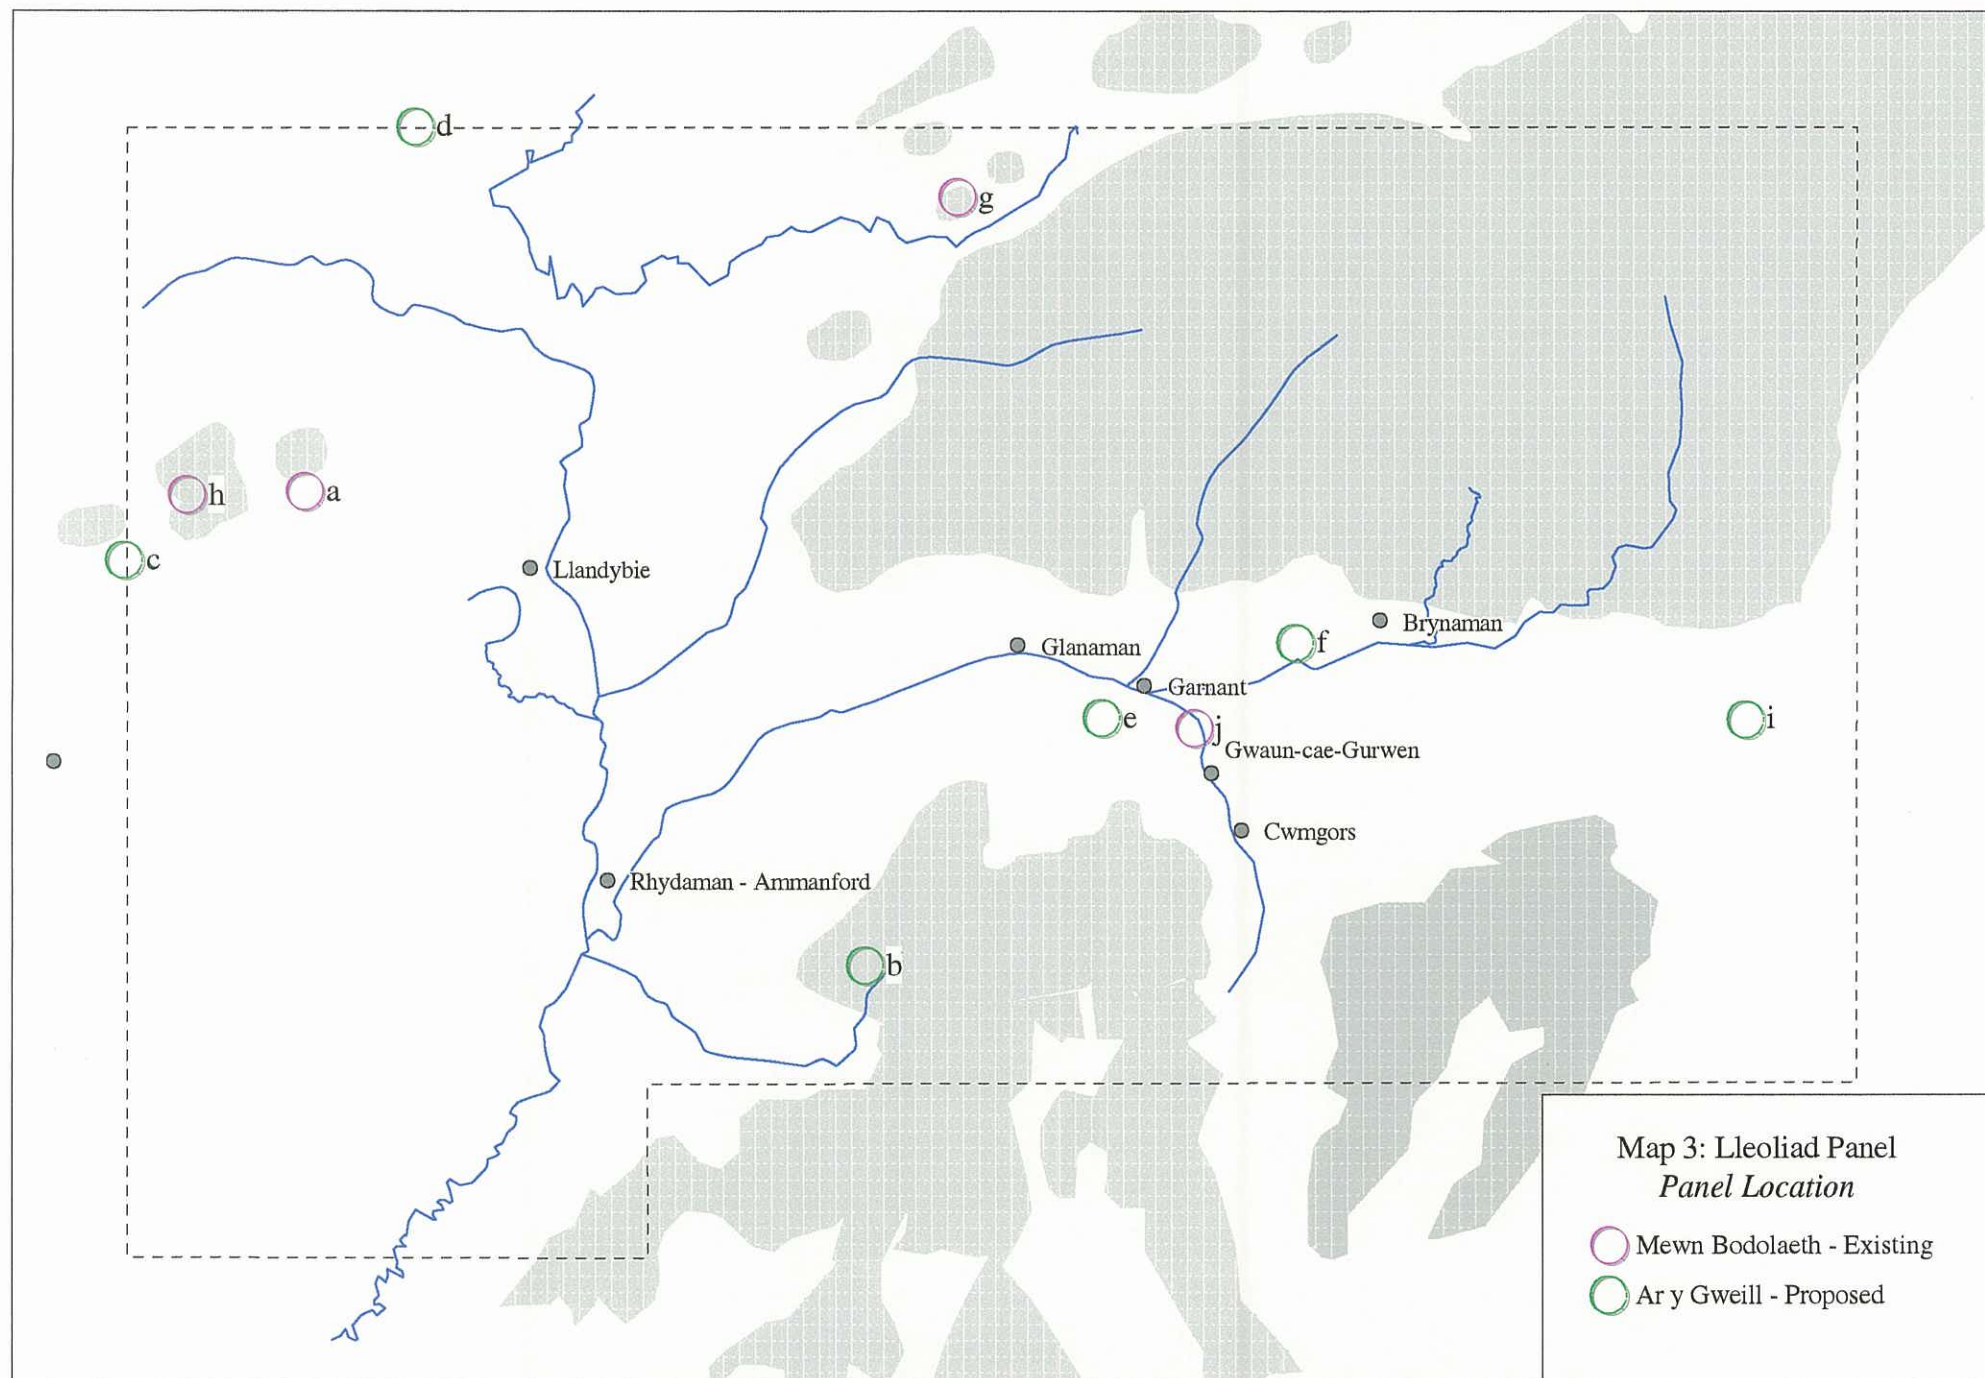

- a) Carmel Woods. Three panels at Carmel which interpret local themes, including the ancient woodland of Carmel Woods, the Pantyllyn bone caves, limeburning and Maenor Meddynfych.
- b) A single panel has been prepared for erection near Scotch Pine, Mynydd y Betws
- c) Six panels are being prepared to interpret heritage, flora and fauna themes at Llyn Llech Owain at the western edge of the defined area.
Cwmaman. A leaflet will also be prepared.
- d) Six panels are being prepared to interpret heritage, flora and fauna themes at Gelli Aur Country Park at the north-western edge of the defined area.
Cwmaman. A leaflet will also be prepared.
- e) Four panels are being prepared to interpret heritage, flora and fauna themes at the golf course above Garnant. A leaflet will also be prepared.
- f) Ten panels are being prepared to interpret heritage, flora and fauna themes at Ynysdawela Country Park. A leaflet will also be prepared.

Further panels are known to exist, or thought to exist at the following locations

- g) It is believed that there is a Cadw panel in the Car Park at Carreg Cennen Castle.
- h) There are Wildlife Trust panels at Carmel Woods, which interpret woodland flora and fauna.
- i) Recommendations have been made for panel interpretation at Henllys Vale colliery. It is not known if they are in place.
- j) An 8' x 6' relief panel located in Garnant commemorating the mining heritage of the district.

4.2 Leaflets

A number of thematic or site specific heritage leaflets and booklets are in existence within the district, but not enough information is available to comment on the current range available. An audit of leaflet and booklet coverage may be a worthwhile exercise for the future to ensure that any new publications are complimentary to existing material.

5. Significant heritage sites (Map 4)

Pantyllyn Bone Cave

Although destroyed by quarrying, the site can still be interpreted in association with the historic woodlands of Carmel, due to the importance of the discovery and the associated legend of Owain Lawgoch.

Bronze Age Monuments

There are many in the area, but a fine cairn that is accessible is to be found at Penrhiwddu on y Mynydd Ddu. This and all the Tair Carn Uchaf cairns can be appreciated from viewpoints at lower altitude and do not necessarily have to be accessed.

Tirydail

This little known motte castle near Ammanford has recently been resurrected and is worthy of interpretation and promotion.

Penlle'r Castell

This hilltop medieval castle is an earthwork site. It is on the St Illtyd Way and at a fine viewpoint.

Carreg Cennen

Probably one of the finest castles in Wales in terms of its location. Already a major attraction.

Llandyfan Forge

An 18th century iron-working complex that has become overgrown. Restoration and interpretation could turn the site into an interesting attraction.

Cilyrychen Kilns

Cilyrychen quarry has a fine bank of 19th century limekilns, which are the most impressive in the county. The preservation and interpretation of these kilns in future is essential.

Henllys Vale

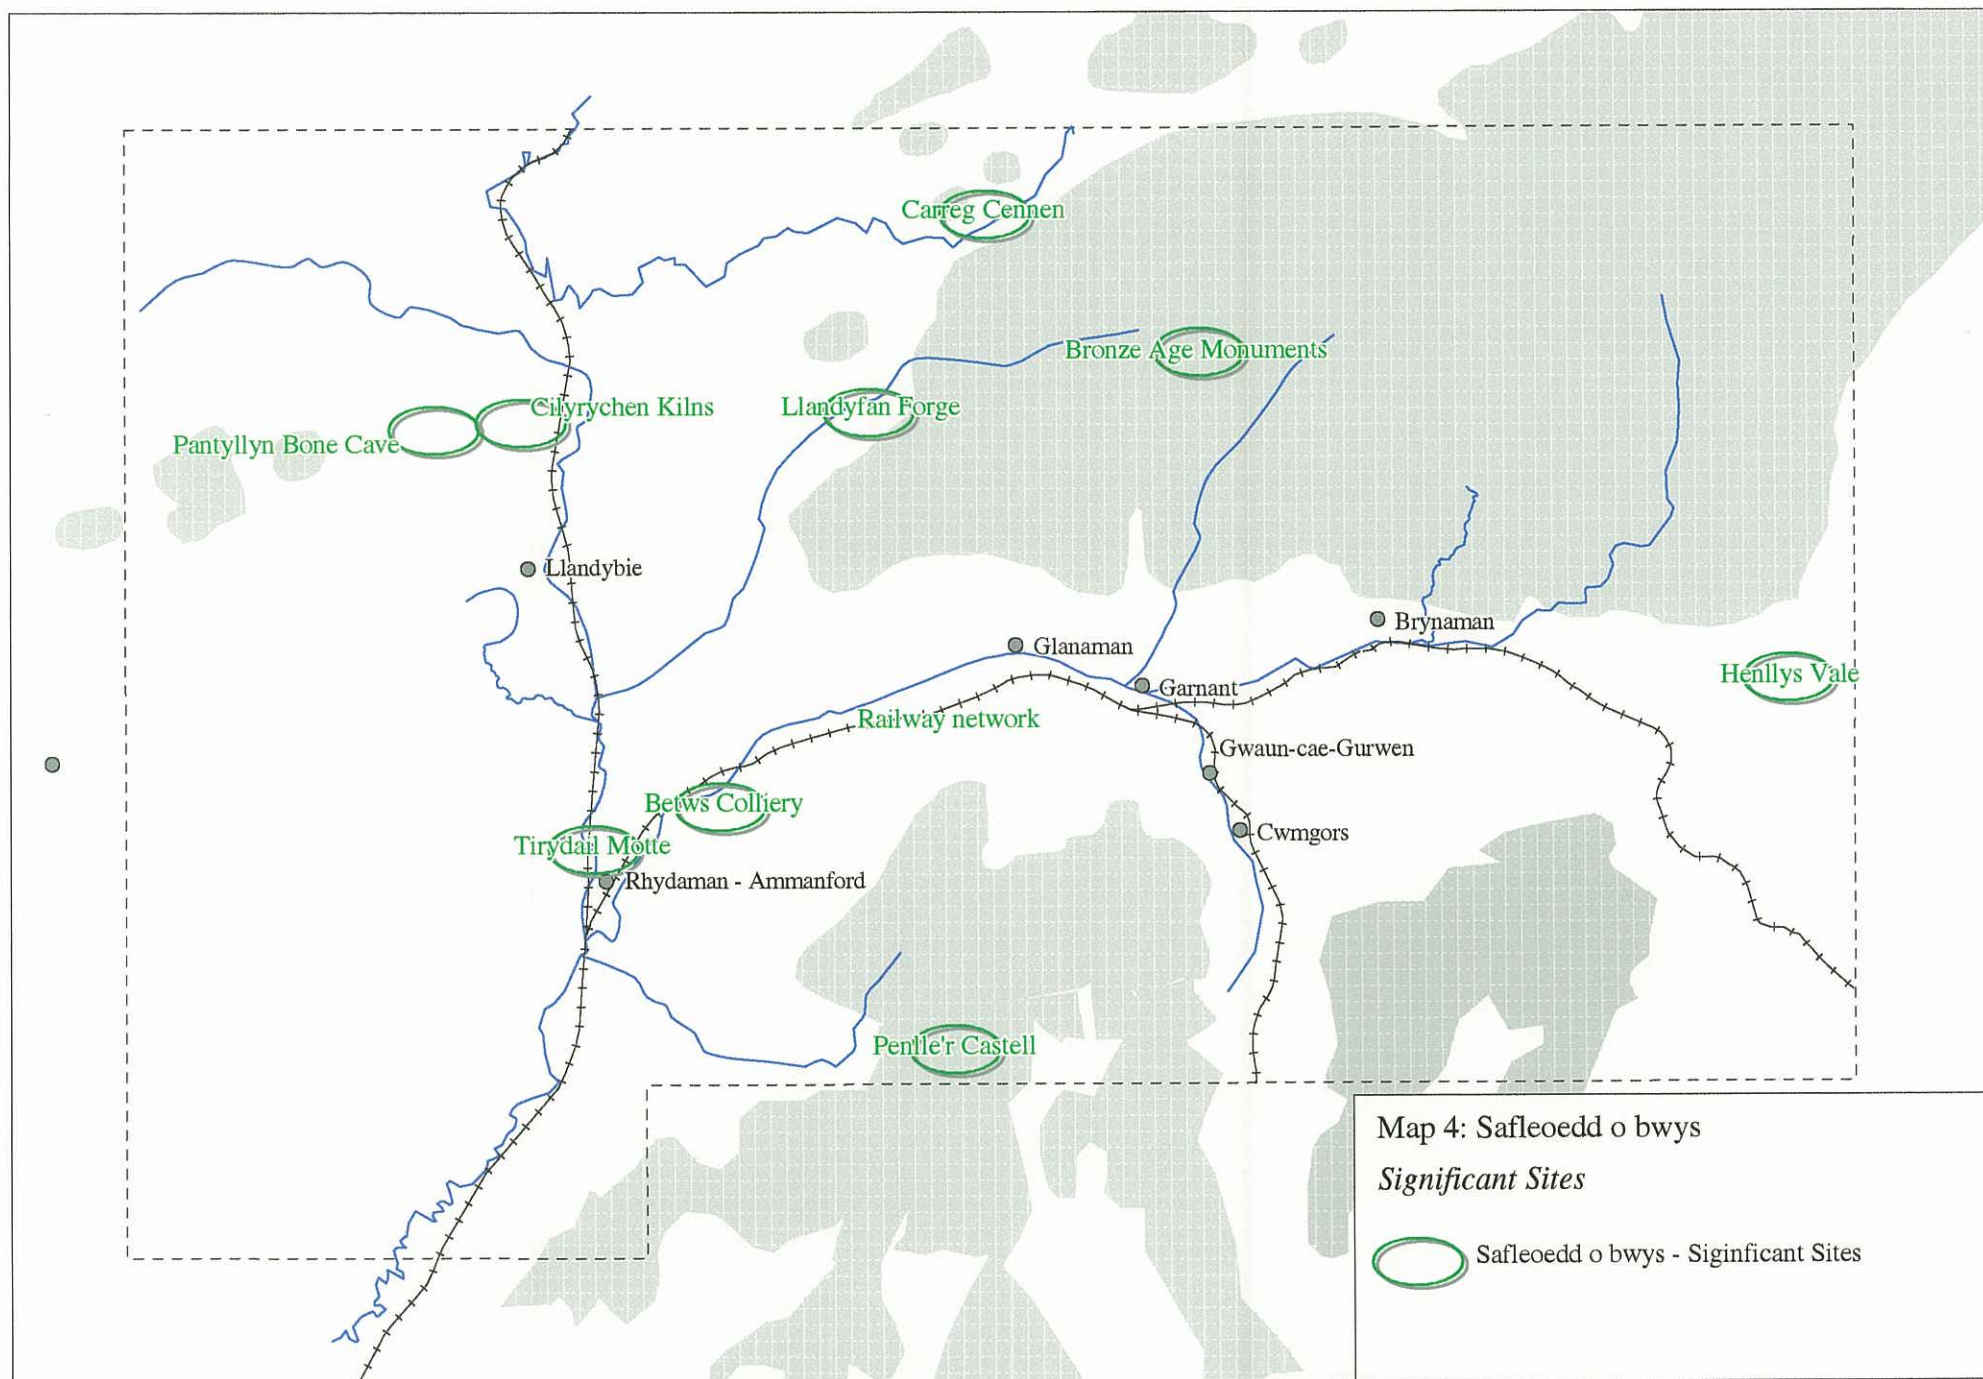

The remaining structures at the colliery site include fragmentary colliery buildings, a limekiln and a large chimney stack. It is connected to limestone quarries on the mountainside by a long tramway bed. The relative rarity of surviving colliery features in the Carmarthenshire coalfield makes this site an important historic asset.

Betws Colliery

This is a working colliery that includes a number of redbrick buildings at its northern end, which date to the late 19th century and once formed the nucleus of the Ammanford Colliery. These may well be the only complete 19th century colliery buildings standing in the district and are of major historical importance.

Railway network.

The possibility of using disused tram and railway lines as footpaths or cycleway in future should be borne in mind.

6. Myths and Legends

Examples of significant myths and legends within the district include;

The Mabinogi legend of the Hunting of the Twrch Trwyth.

Although this Arthurian legend may have roots in Iron Age or early Dark Age tradition, the story is preserved in the collection of medieval tales known as the Mabinogi. One location in the Aman valley that may be linked with this ancient tale is the spot known as Carreg Arthur (which is probably a natural landform) on Mynydd y Betws (PRN 856).

Pantyllyn

Carmel Woods are located on a prominent carboniferous limestone ridge. Typical of a limestone area, there is a system of caves in the ridge. Quarry workers entered one of these caves near Pantyllyn (Ogof Craig Derwyddon or Druid's Crag Cave) in 1813. The discovery of the skeletons was reported in the Cambrian newspaper of August 14th 1813:

"The skulls are of a very great size and thickness and all the bones are of a larger calibre than those of present day men."

From an authenticated report there were twelve skeletons all laying with their faces turned upwards and their heads brought slightly forward on their breasts. The same source reported that two skeletons, lying separately from the rest, were of great size.

Owain Lawgoch

The discovery of the skeletons at Pantyllyn became inextricably caught up in a local legend about Owain Lawgoch. Owain ap Tomos or Owain Lawgoch was a 14th century Welsh prince, great nephew to Llywelyn II, the last true Prince of Wales. He was raised in exile in France, where he was known as Yeuaïn de Galles, and fought with the French against the English. Such a figure was mentioned in a number of early prophetic verses as the man who would save Wales from the Saxons.

Owain did indeed prepare several times to lead an army into Wales to claim his birthright. This alarmed the English court and an English spy eventually murdered Owain Lawgoch, in 1378.

Local legend has it that Owain Lawgoch and his men lie resting in the cave at Pantyllyn, awaiting the call (sometimes a trumpet blast, sometimes a bell) to rise up and save Wales from dire peril.

8. SITE GAZETTEERS & SITE LOCATION MAPS

The following gazetteer and maps have been subdivided by archaeological / historical period, with a map of the relevant sites following each period section.

It must be reiterated that the site details in the Site Gazetteer have been extracted directly from the SMRs and have not been edited at this stage. Errors in grammar and spelling are therefore present and in some instances researchers have used their own shorthand style and terminology, which may not make for easy reading.

In 1914 when the RCAHM visited the site, there were five stones forming a semicircle of c.60' in diameter. The RCAHM inferred from the name "Y Naw Carreg" that there had been nine stones at some point in time. Shortly after this visit the circle was reported as having been much damaged and a further visit was made. All of the stones had been moved although the holes where they had stood were extant. Mounds in the field were not connected with the stone circle but part of an ornamental tree planting design in the 1870's.

Three small stone cairns some 20m west of cairns PRN 27340 & 27341. They are all circular and have a diameter of c.2.5m not standing more than c.0.30m in height. The surrounding ground surface is rather hummocky. There are quarries 30m to the west. There is the possibility that these features would have been visible from the valley. The mounds consist of a mixture of small blocks of limestone brownstone and quartzite similar to the cairns in the next field to the east and separated from them by a field boundary. They stand more or less on the juncture of the Carboniferous and Devonian bedrock hence the nature of the stones used. P.Sambrook 1993.

In 1914 when the RCAHM visited the site, there were five stones forming a semicircle of c.60' in diameter. The RCAHM inferred from the name "Y Naw Carreg" that there had been nine stones at some point in time. Shortly after this visit the circle was reported as having been much damaged and a further visit was made. All of the stones had been moved although the holes where they had stood were extant. Mounds in the field were not connected with the stone circle but part of an ornamental tree planting design in the 1870's.

Complex of rectangular buildings sheltered at the base of a vertical slope at the upper end of Cwm Sawdde Fechan (PRNs 13409-13415 (EM 1988)).^^This group of houses probably represents a settlement associated with limestone working complexes above and S of Blaen y Cylchau. The drystone walls stand to up to 4 foot. There is an extensive turbary about half a mile to the W. (TAJ 1988).^^When visited in 1998, these observations were partly confirmed, but the reinterpretation of some structures was necessary (see individual site records). RPS March 1998

An enclosed settlement formed by a low bank with possibly an external ditch although the bank could be wholly formed from surface scrapings from either side of the bank. Rectangular in shape with rounded corners. Contiguous with the NW side in a shaft/tramway (PRN 2557) which may suggest contemporaneity between the two features. This would argue for the enclosure being Post Med and part of the mineral extraction process or the habitation of the miner(s). Towards the SE side there is a clay mound which appears to seal a house foundation. There are a number of sink holes within the enclosure that also appear to have been worked. On the bank to the E is a ruined very large early lime kiln and associated spoil heap. TAJ 15-2-89.

A pennanular earth & stone bank up to 0.75m high diameter 5.0m 1.0m thick with what appear to be at least two probably four buttress-like features built of earth and stone projecting c.1.5m out and abutting the bank at regular intervals around its circumference. A gap in the bank faces east and may have been an entrance of some kind. Similar in size and shape to a lime kiln but the buttress features and complete lack of lime burning spoil seem to rule this out. P. Sambrook 1994.

Possibly single chambered square building of side 4.0m partially built into slope. Walls are c.0.9m wide. EM 1988?^^The description of this structure is at odds with the^observations of the 1998 visit - it seems that what is^interpreted by EM as two or three separate structures was^seen as a single, multi-celled building in 1998 - described^thus -^^Long building at foot of scree covered slope beneath^limestone crag and therefore well sheltered. Has good^prospect to NW. Grassy area, nettle growth to E end of^structure. Damp, reedy ground to N. Marked as 2 separate^features on SMR base map but arguably a single structure,^the SE wall being continuous. Generally 4m wide x 24m long^on its E-W axis. There are certainly 5 compartments or^rooms. E compartment is largest, with walls standing up to^1.5m high, the N wall showing good coursing in the drystone^wall. There may be a sixth compartment, 4m square,^appended to E end, but the identification of this was^uncertain due to tumbled stone and vegetation. There may^possibly be a small yard on S side at E end. In view of^postulated relationship with the nearby limestone quarries^and limekilns on Blaen Cylchau, this may be seen as a^temporary dwelling for workers seasonally employed at the^quarries. This aerial ropeway was constructed in about 1923 to carry stone from Cincoed Quarry to a siding near Cilyrychen signal box where a siding was specially constructed alongside the railway line. Waggon were loaded directly from the aerial buckets. The aerial ropeway was sold off for scrap in 1938 from Thomas 1975. See also notes on records 27336-39. All that remains of this ropeway are the concrete foundation blocks for the piers - PRN 27336-39.

Site consists of 5 large scoops into the hillside either side of a small stream a tributary of Nant Melyn. The largest scoop at SN68050985 is a U-shaped pit on the Western side of the stream approximately 30m long and 20m wide. Its present depth runs from 8m on the hillslope side to above 2m on the side adjacent to the stream. The shape of the pits suggests open-cast mining of coal into the hillslope of which there are many examples in the locality. A trackway possibly contemporary with the workings runs to the top of the hill to the west from the area of the workings. H.G. & E.M. 25:02:1987

At the extreme southern area of the workings is a 200m long trench mine some 15m deep - now very overgrown - and possibly out of use by c 1840 as it is called Rhyn-y-ddwy-graig on the Tithe Map. A spoil tip lies immediately to the north of this. Further north at SN688129 is an extensive spoil tip probably of later date than those described above as they are not indicated on the Tithe Map; a drift (dis) is indicated on the 1:10:560 OS map SN61SE. A tram road is marked on the Tithe Map running north-south through the area of mine workings - this may be associated with the quarries 24488 24489 to the south. (K Murphy)

This site may have been opencasted - an unsuccessful attempt was made to locate it but landscape changes made by an old opencast mine means that it is difficult to be sure whether an old drift found near an abandoned cottage was in fact the colliery shown on the 1921 OS map. No trace of the engine house or other buildings was found. A colliery which worked into the 1960's was located less than 1km to the NNW and may have been called Brynglas Colliery, though it was on the site of the earlier Cawdor No.2 Colliery (PRN 30622). Brynlloi Colliery was the location of a boat level in the 1770's (Thomas 1898). The 1891 OS map shows numerous small coal workings in the vicinity but the site of the boat level and its canal is unknown. The NGR given here should not be taken as that of the boat level nor that of a colliery working in 1891. P.Sambrook, 1995.

The Cawdor No.1 Colliery was disused by 1907, but a small licensed mine now works the same site. None of the late 19th century colliery buildings appear to survive, but a range of modern structures, predominantly built of corrugated iron and concrete, now occupy the site. Coal is carried from the mine by lorry, the road following the bed of the 19th century tramway that linked the original mine with the railway at Cwmamman, 2km to the north. P.Sambrook, 1995

The colliery site has been cleared and only traces of spoil denote its existence. The Cawdor pit opened around the turn of the century and was connected to the railway at Garnant by a tramway, over 1km long. A working mine is shown here on the 1964 OS 6" map. A small opencast mine, now landscaped, which operated nearby may have removed part of the surface area of the mine and destroyed underground features. P.Sambrook, 1995.

Reported by Roberts as being opened by Messrs. D.Lloyd & Son during the 1850's and operating a water balance system in its single shaft for raising coal to the surface. This system was supplied by two surface reservoirs. A tram link was made to the Rhos Colliery Railway and an incline ran to Pontyblodau. This colliery is not named on any OS map, but its location as described by Roberts approximates with that of Hendre Colliery, shown on the 1891 OS map. The same map shows a small reservoir just north of Hendre Colliery which may be one of those described by Roberts. Whether or not Pwll-y-Lord and Hendre are one and the same is not known. Opened as the Henllys Vale Colliery by the Black Mountain Anthracite Company in 1898. Prior to this coal had been extracted at henllys for use in the lime kilns, PRN 5505, by the Black Mountain Silica Sand, Lime, Brick and Colliery Company Ltd owned by John Hay. Power provided by coal fired steam engine, chimney of which is 20810. The screening walls may have been part driven by water. In 1904, the workforce was 141 but company declined soon after and it was offered for auction in 1906. The kiln and quarry are separated by the cart track that linked the Sawdde Fachan valley Foel Fraeth/Blaen-y-Cylchau limestone working complex with the Cwmllynfell/Brynamman coal producing arer. The cart track is actually cut in places by the quarry and the track subsequently has been diverted to go around it. A very nice example of a single lime-working complex. In use in 1887 but abandoned by 1906. A very good example of a mid-19th century stone-built kiln and in good condition. It is built into a natural slope with the charging-hole at the floor level of the quarry to the East. The kiln stands to its full height of 7.5m. It has a large single round-headed drawing hole arch 3.3m high and 4.3m across at the rear of which are two smaller shallow rounded-headed arches each with a single eye. The charging hole is mostly infilled but was 6.3m in diameter. The kiln is 17.6m wide. The kiln was fed by tramway PRN 27168 which led from quarry PRN 27169. K Murphy 22.11.93.

A lime kiln had been established on the site by 1820. By 1887 the present bank of two kilns had been built with a small quarry PRN 27246 to the west. The kilns were disused by 1906. In the late 1930s the kilns were reused by Mr Wilkins of Pwllymarch but an ownership dispute soon closed them down again. There are substantial spoil heaps of burnt lime to the east. Kiln height 6.5m. Width of north kiln 20.0m width of south kiln 16.5m. Estimated cubic capacity: North kiln 187.63 cu m South kiln 125.98 cu m. K Murphy 9.12.93.

A freestanding kiln complex set inside stone built tunnel. Tunnel is c.23m in length x 5m wide x 9m high (to top of arch). Tramway from quarry runs east-west through tunnel two drawing holes are set in each side of tunnel wall all 3.1m wide x 2.5m high with one kiln eye. The whole structure is c.23m long x 19m wide (on eastern side) and 24m (on western side) and stands c.12m high (from tramway bed to top of wall). Only one kiln pot is evident on top of the structure at the south-west corner seemingly that of the external kiln diameter 3.7m the others are infilled. This kiln seems to utilise a natural outcrop of limestone on its west side instead of the usual pennanular bank. A semi-circular earth bank forms the east side of the kiln abutting the limestone outcrop on the south side leaving a gap on the north for the drawing hole. Spoil is evident downslope to the north. Diameter 4.0m height up to 1.6m. Natural limestone outcrop along ridge exploited as a quarry. P.Sambrook 1993

A freestanding kiln of drystone construction and circular in plan. Best preserved on south and west sides north and east sides are collapsed. On south side there is a stone and earth bank standing up to 1.0m high whilst the west side is a drystone wall standing up to 2.5m high and includes one drawing hole with a single kiln eye. The diameter of the pot is 5.1m. There are spoil tips to the north and west with traces to the east. This suggests that there may have been a second drawing hole to the north or east but that side is too badly damaged to identify any features. P.Sambrook 1993.

A partially freestanding kiln. Two drawing holes each with two kiln eyes. Metal chutes remain in two of the kiln eyes. The kiln is 12.0m high and 18.0m long of good stone build with each drawing hole composed of a yellow brick arch. Cast iron posts of a safety rail remain in place around the charging platform. The kiln pots are infilled. There is a large pile of limestone blocks and lime burning spoil dumped directly in front of the drawing holes completely blocking the northernmost one. However a clear path runs from the southern drawing hole westwards to the top of a covered chute PRN 27441. This suggests that only the latter drawing hole was in use by the time lime burning ceased here. Very well preserved but now very overgrown and obscured by trees. P.Sambrook 1994.

A freestanding kiln. Pot diameter c.3.0m - partially infilled. All other features absent. Seems to have been re-used as a pier for the later crushing mill hence the drawing hole has either been buried or destroyed by some form of rebuild. Certainly there was a kiln on this site in 1876. NB - The dressed stones used to build this pier are markedly different from the concrete structures used elsewhere in the crushing mill. P.Sambrook 1994

Kiln stands atop an earth mound 2.5m high. Earth pennanular bank around kiln pot which has a diameter of ^2.5m depth 1.0m. Drawing hole faces south-east. Spoil tips to south and west are the most striking feature of this kiln. That to the south is crescent shaped and some 50m in length x 10m wide x 2m high. Considerable quantities of spoil have also slipped or been tipped into the abandoned quarry which lies 30m south of kiln. The spoil tip to the west extends 30m in a straight line from the edge of the kiln again 2m high and up to 10m thick. Noteable site. P.Sambrook 1994.

Bank kiln with two drawholes served by two kiln pots originally according to tithe map though these are no longer visible. Drawholes face south and west. Drawholes are arched voussoirs of south drawhole arch have collapsed but otherwise it is intact including a drawhole recess which is 6.0m long closing to a point at back of recess with two square kiln eyes set into north-west face. West drawhole similar. Kiln bank is L-shaped 22.0m north to south x 7.0m east-west and up to 6.0m high. There is a thick band of clinker exposed above this kiln which may be derived from it or could possibly indicate that lime was produced on site previous to construction of bank kiln. Certainly in use in 1839 and seemingly so in 1887 but apparently abandoned before 1907. P.Sambrook 1994.

Limestone quarrying and lime burning has a long history in the area. In 1734 (CRO Cawdor Vaughan 99/7895) the tenant of Glan Gwenlesh was given permission to build two kilns. Two kilns are shown on the Llanfihangel Aberbythych tithe map of 1839 and in 1878 the OS 1st edition 1:2500 shows two kilns fed by a tramway leading from a small quarry. All these early remains have been erased by the extensive quarry associated with the Pentregwenlais Lime Works. These works were established in the first few years of the 20th century. In 1900 a valuation for a branch line running across land in the Cawdor estate was made (CRO Cawdor Vaughan 2/227). The works were built soon after for the three massive kilns on the site have a date stone of 1903. It is clear from the design of the kilns that five were originally planned. The works also included a stone crushing plant and other facilities. The company seems to have run into financial difficulties early in its life. In 1906 it merged with Penson and Southern Ltd of Cilrychen to form Lime Firms Ltd (Anon 1900 p70). The quarry was worked until c.1973. All the buildings of the works apart from the kilns PRN 25537 were demolished in 1991. K Murphy 1994.

According to Thomas (1975) the quarry had been idle for some 50 years when it was taken over by a private company in 1920. An aerial ropeway was built PRN 27739 in 1920. The quarry was still working in 1969. It is now redundant and used by a shooting club.

Lime burning and limestone quarrying has been taking place on the site since at least the end of the 18th century - kilns are marked on estate maps in the Cawdor Vaughan collection in Carmarthen Record Office. Thomas (1975 51) considers this to be the oldest quarry operating in Llandybie parish. In the first recorded instance it was operated by David Thomas of Cilrychen and was in full production in the 1770s. It seems to have fallen out of production for in 1861 Thomas Sheperd Strick and Henry Richard of Brynaman Iron Works were granted the rights to re-open the old quarry behind Pistill Isa House and quarry limestone and red sandstone and to build a kiln or kilns and erect other buildings. (CRO Dynenor 30/16). A spur line from the main-line railway was also constructed. It is not certain when the lime works stopped production. Thomas (1975 53) considers that it was in the last decades of the 19th century. In 1871 John Howells a Swansea millwright obtained the rights to quarry plastic clay and silica sand on Pistyll Mountain on part of Pistill Isa (CRO Dynevor 61/31). These minerals were further exploited in the early 20th century. Penson and Southern of Cilrychen Lime Works took up an option to develop the site in 1902 (CRO Dynevor 71/16 and 42). They do not seem to have operated on the site for in the same year the rights were re-leased to The Carmarthenshire Silica Company (CRO Dynevor 73/9). The silica deposits did not come up to expectations and in 1913 the Company was having to import silica sand from Mr Dubusson's land via an incline constructed through woods belonging to Lord Dynevor (CRO Dynevor 30/16). The Carmarthenshire Silica Company supplied or many have been a subsidiary of Bynea Steel Co of Llanelli (Thomas 1975 53). According to Thomas the silica works were in full production in 1924 employing about 50 men. They closed in 1927 and did not re-open.

POND: The 1st edition 1:2500 OS map of the area, published in 1876, shows that a small pond had been created a short distance to the east of Cathilas farmhouse. It was created by damming the small stream which flows past the farmyard. The dam was constructed with rough millstone grit blocks and now survives in a very ruinous state, with the central section having been eroded away. The dam stands to about 2m in height and along the valley sides there are traces of a partial stone lining to the pond. The 1876 map indicates that a sluice in the dam and another further downstream controlled water flow, presumably supplying a water wheel on the farm. P. Sambrook, 1997.

Quarry not marked on 1st nor 2nd edition 1:2500 maps though working limekilns are recorded on 1st edition (1887)^and 'Old Limekilns' on 2nd edition (1905). Extent of quarry has been enlarged since publication of 6" map in 1964. Tramway bed is still visible though track has been removed. The tramway seems to have climbed out of the quarry at its west end where it follows a steep incline. Parts of unidentified machinery remain on quarry floor possibly part of crusher. There are two sheds built of steel girders and zinc sheeting in the quarry one of which has been almost totally destroyed the other still standing but their relationship to quarrying activity is unknown. Other features include a weighbridge and a tarmaced area which may have been an area where crushed stone was heaped before removal. P.Sambrook 1994.

Close to the E edge of the Cennen gorge is a series of small quarries linked by zig-zag roads. The roads presumably linked to others on the opposite W side of the gorge either via a chain-link bridge or some form of breeches buoy apparatus. On the western side I observed a piece of iron tram rail used to stake the fixtures of the bridge/apparatus. On the W side a made roadway can be seen rising up along the contour and then turning tightly back on itself suddenly finishing some distance from the summit. Another branch of the roadway runs towards Carn Fawr around Llwyn du Isaf. (TAJ 16-2-89)

Small mound of spoil from lime burning incorporated into field boundary bank measuring 2.0m x 2.0m. No kiln apparent though there are several kilns c.80m to the east which could be the source though it seems unlikely that spoil would be moved so far. Another possibility is that the trackway on the east side of the boundary bank was constructed at a later date than the lime burning and has destroyed the kiln. Slight traces of spoil do occur on the track itself and on the field banks on its east side. P.Sambrook 1993.

Exposure of lime burning spoil in cutting made to build 19th century stables at Pistyll-bach. The cutting is c.15m south-west of the old quarry (PRN 27111). The stratigraphy gives some indication that the quarry may have destroyed at least one lime kiln. The band of lime spoil is 0.5m thick and 1.5m below the surface though the soil overlaying the spoil gradually decreases in thickness to the north until the spoil is at the surface. The soil at the top of the profile could well be material that was excavated during the initial stages of the quarrying and dumped downslope of the exposed limestone. Clearly the lime burning predates the quarrying which in turn predates the construction of the stable. P.Sambrook 1993.

BOUNDARY BANK; Probably one of the most important historical events to affect the property was the enclosure of the former third of the property was open moorland until the late 18th century and it is perhaps significant that the field boundary between this former common land and the previous farmed area is a substantial stone and earth bank, standing over 1m high and c3m wide with a fairly deep and wide ditch on its northern side (i.e. facing the former common). Coach house associated with PRN 20925. The Reverend James Jones, rector of Cound, Salop, leased the property (20925) to the John Jones of Myddenfych in 1713. By the mid-18th century it was the home of the Davies family. In 1815 the residence was described as a 'respectable old mansion.' Unfortunately the mansion was demolished in 1982.^^The Ordnance Survey 1st ed. Maps for Carmarthenshire Sheet XLVIII NE 1887 shows the mansion with a collection of outbuildings and what may be the coach house. Some of these building possibly appear on the 1840 Llandyb e Parish Tithe. The coach house may be the only remaining structure of this local historically important site.

The remains of stone cottage including the ruinous southern end of the cottage and a small lean-to attached to it. Walls stand to 2.0m high (probably wallplate level) and 0.5m thick. Overall the surviving masonry measures 3.4m wide by 5.4m long. Quoin stones are visible at the south-east and south-west corners of the cottage where they abutt the lean-to wall and a fireplace survives in the north side of the gable end. The rest of the cottage has been lost. Appears to be inhabited on the 1885 edition 1:2500 map but abandoned by the time of the 2nd edition in 1906. P.Sambrook 1994.

Not marked on Tithe Map. Cottage decaying but largely complete. Most interesting features which survive are the wattle frame and thatching of the roof covered with zinc sheets but visible from inside and the beams and some floorboards of the crogloff. Internally walls were whitewashed and it is still possible to discern the position of internal partition walls. A chimney stands in each gable with the 'simne fawr' in the western end. Added to the west end of the cottage is a small pigsty or outhouse. Wattle in roof includes gorse branches and the thatch is of reed. Some of the crogloff beams are of sawn softwood carcassing. Complex of rectangular buildings sheltered at the base of a vertical slope at the upper end of Cwm Sawdde Fechan (PRNs 13409-13415 (EM 1988)).^This group of houses probably represents a settlement associated with limestone working complexes above and S of Blaen y Cylchau. The drystone walls stand to up to 4 foot. There is an extensive turbarry about half a mile to the W. (TAJ 1988).^When visited in 1998, these observations were partly confirmed, but the reinterpretation of some structures was necessary (see individual site records). RPS March 1998

DWELLING? GARDEN?: On the northern edge of the property, near the cottage known as Groesffordd, there are clear earthwork traces of rectangular enclosure which includes traces of cultivation ridges typical of a lazy-bed garden. This is connected by another earth bank to a second rectangular feature measuring c10m x 4m, which may represent the site of a dwelling of another enclosure. The location of these features or former common land may suggest this to be former squatters dwelling, perhaps a ty unnos, built before the 19th century. However, their location alongside a trackway leading to Groesffordd, which post-dates the enclosure of Y Pal in the 18th century, suggests the possibility that some attempt was made to settle here after the common was enclosed and improved, and the trackway created.
P. Sambrook, 1997.

Enw Name	UNKNOWN

An enclosed settlement formed by a low bank with possibly an external ditch although the bank could be wholly formed from surface scrapings from either side of the bank. Rectangular in shape with rounded corners. Contiguous with the NW side in a shaft/tramway (PRN 2557) which may suggest contemporaneity between the two features. This would argue for the enclosure being Post Med and part of the mineral extraction process or the habitation of the miner(s). Towards the SE side there is a clay mound which appears to seal a house foundation. There are a number of sink holes within the enclosure that also appear to have been worked. On the bank to the E is a ruined very large early lime kiln and associated spoil heap. TAJ 15-2-89.

This house known as Tir Dafydd Hopkin on the Betws Tithe Map c1840. The present house is a two storey structure rectangular plan central front door. Indications of an early structure incorporated in the building. There is a cowshed attached to the south gable and an outshot on the rear (east) of the house. At the time of survey (1987) this house was deserted and the doors and windows bricked up. As the house is on the edge of open-cast coal workings it is likely to be demolished. (K.Murphy)

On same alignment, further N is another more ruined rectangular building 6.0 x 3.7m. Walls 0.7m wide (EM 1988).^^A sheepfold at the confluence of the Sawdde & Sawrg SN764193. The fold is irregular and sub-circular in shape. It runs parallel to the stream on a N-S axis and measures 11m x 8m. There is a rectangular compartment at the N end with an entrance in the W side. The walls stand up to 1.5m high. The southern end is the more ruinous. Rectangular compartment is 8m long E-W with another ruined cell abutting its N side extending for another 5m and being 4m wide. This compartment seems to be sub-divided into two smaller cells but the detail is obscured by collapse. ^RSR March 1999^

Complex of large curvilinear enclosures on S-facing slope within angle of sharp turn in disused Bryn Mountain road. (EM Dec 1988). The relationships between these features and Bryn road (?trunked late 18th/early 19th century) is uncertain. They could be earlier as slight traces of walling on the S side of the road appear to be cut by the construction of the latter. Moreover the fact that the road actually zig-zags around the features supports an earlier date. However there is still a possibility that they could be contemporary. If so then function could be to pen in stock overnight? (TAJ Dec 1988).

A pennanular earth & stone bank up to 0.75m high diameter 5.0m 1.0m thick with what appear to be at least two probably four buttress-like features built of earth and stone projecting c.1.5m out and abutting the bank at regular intervals around its circumference. A gap in the bank faces east and may have been an entrance of some kind. Similar in size and shape to a lime kiln but the buttress features and complete lack of lime burning spoil seem to rule this out. P. Sambrook 1994.

Adjoining to W on same alignment a square building of side 4.5m. EM 1988?^^The description of this structure is at odds with the observations of the 1998 visit - it seems that what is^ interpreted by EM as two or three separate structures was^seen as a single, multi-celled building in 1998 - described ^ thus -^^Long building at foot of scree covered slope beneath limestone crag and therefore well sheltered. Has good prospect to NW. Grassy area, nettle growth to E end of structure. Damp, reedy ground to N. Marked as 2 separate features on SMR base map but arguably a single structure, the SE wall being continuous. Generally 4m wide x 24m long on its E-W axis. There are certainly 5 compartments or rooms. E compartment is largest, with walls standing up to 1.5m high, the N wall showing good coursing in the drystone wall. There may be a sixth compartment, 4m square, appended to E end, but the identification of this was uncertain due to tumbled stone and vegetation. There may possibly be a small yard on S side at E end. In view of postulated relationship with the nearby limestone quarries and limekilns on Blaen Cylchau, this may be seen as a temporary dwelling for workers seasonally employed at the quarries. (see also PRN 13414). RPS July 1998

The Black Mountain Graziers Association wished to repair and reuse the ruins of Cwmllywd sheepfold on the northern fringes of the Black Mountain, Llangadog, Carm. The work was undertaken through the agency of the Meithrin Mynydd project. A planning application was submitted to Brecon Beacon National Park Authority and a brief for the archaeological recording of the fold was written by the curatorial section of Dyfed Archaeological Trust in consultation with the BBNP Authority's archaeologist. Archaeoleg Cambria Archaeology were commissioned to undertake the recording of the fold. ^Documentary and cartographic sources were consulted and oral evidence recorded. A mountain road probably a de moro turnpike road or an earlier road subsequently turnpiked. The road was never tarmacaded and fell into disuse. As such it remains a rare example of what the methods of turnpike construction were. The carriage way = as broad as any present A-road was cleared of stone debris and this stone banked up on either side. Problems with crossing streams and spring lines evidently manifested themselves early on. The road was probably abandoned in favour of the present Brynamman to Llangadog road. (TAJ 15-2-89)

The type of this monument is unknown. It is possibly an old lime kiln as there are many others in the area.K.Murphy^ No tower survives. Site occupied by a large quantity of apparently quarried stone with which a series of 3 small sub-circular 'sheep-holes' have been constructed each with a diameter of c.1.5m. The stone does not appear to have been derived from the millstone grit outcropping in the immediate vicinity of the site but possibly from quarries downslope ^to the E. or S. possibly for the purpose of construction the now lost tower. A slight hump in the surface 5m NE of the 'sheep-holes' may represent the site of the tower. It is circular diameter c.10m and partially ringed by upstanding and flat gritstone blocks being no more than 0.3m high. Within the circle gritstone blocks protrude through the grass cover. This could also possibly be the site of a cairn robbed of its stone

Former track or tramway running north-east from east edge of PISTYLL QUARRY. A possible trackway running from the now destroyed Pistyll Farm. It passes close by all the limekilns in the woods to the east of the quarry and may have been constructed or used for the purpose of moving lime produced by the kilns. This very distinct causeway, c.4m wide, 1m high, continues the line of the current public road 3337. This causeway has been breached by several streams, and at the NW end of the survey area has been removed completely by erosion. On aerial photographs its line can be traced further, curving round to the north and eventually continuing as track 35477. It seems likely that this now abandoned track was the original line of the turnpike road 3337 before its replacement with the current tarmac road. The line of this track is cut across by track 35476. Small roofed brick building approx. 7m X 4m. Walls covered in grey render. Building still used as sub power station by electricity board. Apart from the power house opposite no other structure in immediate area. Still in use as power station. Likely related to later 1930's mining. CAP 2000

MACHINE BASE

Cyfeirnod Record Number	33415	Cyfeirnod Grid Grid Reference	SN73101409	Statws Safle Site Status
Enw Name

Probable machine base, apparently of drystone construction but perhaps mortaring may be hidden by the turf which covers most of the walls. Main part is rectangular, with two spur walls projecting to the E. It seems likely that this site is related to the nearby mine site (PRN 3561). RK 1996

RAILWAY

Roofed Structure approx. 6m X 2m at edge of old railway line (PRN:41202). Tram line from SW (PRN: 41230) meets structure. Possibly locomotive shed. At time dense vegetation, however an area of banking was discovered which may have a relation to feature. Tramline (PRN: 41230); Early Emlyn Colliery c.1900. CAP 2000

Cyfeirnod Record Number	41204	Cyfeirnod Grid Grid Reference	SN5847613525	Statws Safle Site Status
Enw Name	EMLYN

Roofed structure (6m X 3m) as shown on 1905/6/15/21 maps. On 1915 map structure labelled as the 'Library'. Foundations on 1946/4772/79 AP's still visible within vegetation cover. No visible surface trace whilst field walking. No surface trace remains discovered. Related to Emlyn Colliery complex. CAP 2000

Cyfeirnod Record Number	41210	Cyfeirnod Grid Grid Reference	SN58361333	Statws Safle Site Status
