

The grey slate roof has fallen into the mill and the 1st floor of the 2-storey building has also collapsed. The building is rectangular ~~and~~ in shape and the walls are in good condition - though threatened by trees growing closely to them.

In the room closest to the road is a large inglenook fireplace with a hood reaching right up to the roof - see sketch. The hood was constructed from planks of timber sealed with daub. At the other end of the building the waterwheel was of the over-shoot type. Inside the building the cogs & wheel are all still in situ.
