Foundations

2899

A good many hut foundations, many double, but all lines with stone in the usual fashion. Mr. Drane of Cardiff had been digging in some of them and disclosed calcined clay flooring. Among the debris left by him I found an egg-shaped stone, artifically worked, and I think an amulet, but as it had been knocked about by him with a hammer, it almost looked like a pounder. There are in this neighbourhood and all over the uncultivated portion of the island, the remains of many inclosures.
