	AUTH	IORITY
e's Court (Arch. Canve passed since the average part of the greater part of tanding in a perilouch must soon arive, to of the ancient howell to a certain on No. 8 (which is one the front, which ing through a someway good state of prillustration No. 8, and which may state of the first floor also no doubt of recent been designed to state must have been interested.	amb. III, XIV, 617. But at date, the old house the south side has be usly dilapidated condi when the colliery tip me of the Bonviles. It extent misread his ruin the south side) reprimust be sought on the hat flat-headed arch (eservation) and through into a building, the fill be traced. The little construction. The old and alone as a fortrestended as gate-house to	has fallen en torn out tion await- will bury seemed to n, and that esents the north side, which still gh the arch gable of ttle door in ding. The der building ss, with its o some house
			(
using Theauth noughant C19th up, when house the towers re	by encroaching ing miners.	Lhoyd /	T 1986
	the late Mr. Barny le's Court (Arch. Carve passed since the average part of tanding in a perilor ch must soon arive, to of the ancient howell to a certain in No. 8 (which is one of the front, which ing through a somewary good state of prillustration No. 8, and which may state the first floor also no doubt of recent been designed to state must have been into the has disappeared, put the state of the state	Saundersfoot Bonville's Court It the late Mr. Barnwell described, and Mr. Be's Court (Arch. Camb. III, xiv, 81). Dure ave passed since that date, the old house the greater part of the south side has be tanding in a perilously dilapidated condicts must soon arive, when the colliery tipe to f the ancient home of the Bonviles. It must be a certain extent misread his ruin No. 8 (which is on the south side) reprote the front, which must be sought on the ing through a somewhat flat-headed arch rry good state of preservation) and through illustration No. 8, into a building, the s, and which may still be traced. The lith he first floor also leads into this building no doubt of recent construction. The old been designed to stand alone as a fortress must have been intended as gate-house to has disappeared, pulled down perhaps to be a second of the secon	Saundersfoot Bonville's Court 3644 3 the late Mr. Barnwell described, and Mr. Blight Le's Court (Arch. Camb. III, xiv, 81). During the ave passed since that date, the old house has fallen the greater part of the south side has been torn out tanding in a perilously dilapidated condition await- ch must soon arive, when the colliery tip will bury t of the ancient home of the Bonviles. It seemed to nwell to a certain extent misread his ruin, and that n No. 8 (which is on the south side) represents the of the front, which must be sought on the north side, ing through a somewhat flat-headed arch (which still ry good state of preservation) and through the arch illustration No. 8, into a building, the gable of s, and which may still be traced. The little door in the first floor also leads into this building. The no doubt of recent construction. The older building been designed to stand alone as a fortress, with its must have been intended as gate-house to some house has disappeared, pulled down perhaps to make way for its. The author 1670 The author 1670 The fourth of the source of