Blaengwaith Noah

Small camp 3796

Stands on a tongue of land with brawling stream to right and left. When its extremely limited space is considered, it is very strongly fortified. It seems too small for a stockaded village, and the interior has not been levelled. Was it the stronghold of a chieftain? It is locally called BLAEN GWYDDYR, source of the Gwydduo. See Mr. Henry Owen's note in Owen's Pembrokeshire, I, 246. Noe was said to be a son of Arthur. See translation of The Mabinogion by Lady Charlotte Guest, 1877, page 298.
