At this spot are the remains of a building formerly a public-house. From under the plaster on the walls of this ruin, some soldiers quartered at Dale Point some 25 years ago, took many silver coins (said to have been "foreign dollars") which they sold in Pembroke Dock to "Ben Lyon, the Jew". The sergeant left in charge after the soldiers had gone away was Mr. Mathias' informant.

Six guineas are known to have been picked up at this place; five at one time, one at another. Report says about the end of the last century certain loose women resided at the public-house (No. 20) who were suspected of murdering Portuguese sailors who landed there from their vessel and were never seen or heard of again. Were the coins found in the house Portuguese?
