Summary

In April 2013 Archaeology Wales carried out a desk-based assessment to determine the archaeological potential of a plot of land adjacent to Western Way, Pembroke Dock, Pembrokeshire. The site comprises a former hardware depot, the buildings of which were demolished around 5 years ago. The site lies within a landscape of known archaeological and historic significance, within the Milford Haven Waterway Registered Historic Landscape, with several Scheduled Ancient Monuments and Listed buildings located nearby. The local area also contains significant remains of WWII defences and military infrastructure, historic docks and one of the two Martello towers built to protect the docks in the mid-nineteenth century. The site itself lies within an area of reclaimed land.

1. Introduction

In April 2013, Archaeology Wales was commissioned by Axiom Architects and Carter Lauren Construction Ltd to carry out an archaeological desk-based assessment of a site of proposed development on land adjacent to Western Way, Pembroke Dock, Pembrokeshire (NGR: SM 96722 03782; fig 1). The work is being carried out pre-planning.

The proposed development comprises the construction of a pub/restaurant and associated infrastructure (fig. 2).

The site lies within the Milford Haven Waterway Registered Historic Landscape (RHL HLW (D) 3), an area renowned for its archaeological remains dating from the prehistoric period to the twentieth century. These remains reflect the maritime history of the area and include several castles, fishing settlements, sea defences and WWII camps and shelters. There are a number of landed estates in the area together with remains of post-medieval industry and farming.

The desk-based assessment involved an appraisal of all the documentary and cartographic sources pertaining to the site, the aerial photographs held by RCAHMS in Aberystwyth, and a site visit. The work was carried out by Amelia Pannett in April 2013.

2. Site Description

2.1 Location, Geology and Topography

The site lies on level ground on the western side of the town of Pembroke Dock, between the high water mark and Western Way, at around 5m AOD. The site lies on reclaimed land and comprises an area of concrete with the foundations of former buildings.

2.2 Historical Background

The site lies within the Milford Haven Waterway Registered Historic Landscape, an area recognised for its extensive history of settlement, occupation, industry, agriculture and defence. The register summarises the landscape:

“The classic ria, drowned river valley and estuary in Wales, with an unsurpassed concentration of remains reflecting maritime conquest, settlement, commerce, fishing, defence and industry spanning the prehistoric to modern periods. The area includes: Iron Age promontory forts; Early Christian and Viking placenames; Norman coastal castle boroughs; medieval castles and later gentry residences; Milford and Pembroke Dock planned settlements; recent and modern quays, jetties and landing places, coal mines, limestone quarries, military and naval fortifications, oil terminals, jetties, refineries and power station.” (CCW 2012)

The site is within the Pembroke Dock HLC character area of the registered historic landscape. The HLC listing describes it:

“Pembroke Dock is an urban historic landscape character area. It is centred on the 19th century and early 20th century naval dockyards, and smaller private shipbuilding yards. The naval dockyards are surrounded by a high defensive wall and flanked by two 19th century gun towers. Large parts of the yard are now given over to modern industry, including the Irish ferry port, but several large stone buildings in the Georgian tradition close to the dock’s entrance provide a strong architectural signature. Several of the original docks also survive as do a collection of 20th century military structures, including two large hangars built for flying boats. Pembroke fort, originally constructed on an open hillside overlooking the dockyards is now surrounded by development. The 19th century town is built in a grid pattern, and this, together with the survival of many wide streets of contemporaneous houses and other buildings, provides a strong architectural signature. The combination of a planned street pattern and high survival rate of contemporaneous houses and other buildings provides Pembroke Dock with a coherent historic character that is rarely matched in other Welsh towns. These 19th century dockyard worker houses are generally of two storey terraces, cement rendered, and broadly in the Georgian tradition. The social and economic landscape of the town is manifest in details such as the larger ‘foreman’ houses that stand at the ends of terraces. Three storey houses on some street corners in the commercial centre emphasise the importance of certain road intersections. At Pennar overlooking the dockyards to the south the grid pattern of wide streets is maintained, but here terraces of single-storey cottages provide a very distinctive, if not unique, aspect to the town. In all there are 125 listed buildings within the town. There is not a great deal of later 19th century and early to mid-20th century housing, but later 20th century housing and other buildings testify to intensifying growth in this period. Several of the 20th century military installations have been redeveloped into offices and light industrial estates; many have been demolished and the land restored. The Cleddau Bridge, which replaced a ferry, has rejuvenated the northern side of the town. It is here that much of the light industry is located. A golf course lies within this area (DAT 2013).

3. Desk-based Assessment Results

3.1 HER Data

A study area was implemented, covering land within 2km of the proposed development site.

A total of 603 features of archaeological significance are listed on the HER within the study area (fig. 3; see appendix I for listing). The majority of the sites are post-medieval or modern in date and relate to wartime defences and industrial activities in and around Pembroke Dock. The war time defences include 18 air raid shelters, two artillery towers, 22 military barracks, eight barrage balloon sites, three bomb stores, two firing ranges, three aircraft hangars, nine magazines, two messes, a number of assorted military buildings and a flying boat station.

There are five medieval sites within the study area, comprising two religious sites, two settlements and a ferry crossing. St Patrick's Church, Paterchurch, is located 1km to the west of the proposed development site, while the site of a former ferry crossing at Hobbs Point is located 500m to the north.

The majority of the post-medieval sites are related to the development of Pembroke Dock as a centre for shipbuilding and its on-going defence. The recorded sites include docks, slipways, quays, customs houses, the Martello Towers, storehouses, industrial buildings, schools, churches and houses. Six of the sites within 200m of the proposed development site relate to the use of the area in shipbuilding, comprising docks, slipways, a crane and a saw mill.

There are 82 listed buildings on the HER. All of the listed buildings are post-medieval in date and comprise dwellings, shops, railway stations, warehouses, walls, churches, bridges, public houses, jettys, slip ways and quays. Four Grade II listed buildings are located within 200m of the proposed development area, these comprise three houses on Front Street and dry dock.

Six Scheduled Ancient Monuments (SAMs) are located within the study area. These sites include a gun battery and the Burton ferry landing stage located on the northern side of Milford Haven waterway, over 1km from the proposed development site. St Patrick's Church is also a SAM, as are the Martello Tower, the Royal naval dockyard chapel and the mid-nineteenth century defensible barracks all of which are over 800m from the proposed development site.

There are a number of sites within the immediate vicinity of the proposed development area (fig. 3b), including the three Grade II listed houses on Front Street and the Grade II listed dry dock. The remaining sites relate to the post-medieval use of the area for shipbuilding and the defense of the dockyards in WWII, a number of which have been destroyed. There are no features of archaeological or historic significance recorded within the proposed development area.

3.2 Map Regression

Tithe Map 1839

The Tithe map for Pembroke St Mary's Parish dated from 1839 is only available to view as a series of poor quality photocopies in the National Library, Aberystwyth, consequently it has not been reproduced here. The tithe map shows the proposed development site as lying off-shore, within the inter-tidal zone, adjacent to a series of docks.

OS 1st Edition 1:2500 Map 1866

The OS 1st edition map of 1866 (fig. 4) shows the location of the proposed development site lying within the inter-tidal zone between two of the dock structures. There is no depiction of structure or features within the area.

OS 2nd Edition 1:2500 Map 1908

The 2nd Edition map of 1908 (fig. 5) reveals that the proposed development area has been reclaimed and is being used as a timber yard. A track runs into the timber yard from a saw mill located immediately to the south, crossing the newly extended Front Street and splitting into two lines towards the centre of the proposed development site.

Later 20th Century Maps

Twentieth century mapping shows that the site remains in use as a timber yard until the demolition of the buildings in the early 2000s.

3.3 Aerial Photographs

All the RAF and OS aerial photographs held by the RCAHMS in Aberystwyth depicting the proposed development site were examined. Aerial images from 1946 (fig. 6) and 1959 (fig. 7) show the proposed development site as containing two large buildings and associated infrastructure.

No features of potential archaeological significance are shown on any of the aerial photographs.

4. Site Visit

A site visit was carried out on 15th May in sunny and dry conditions.

The site comprises a former timber depot on reclaimed land adjacent to Western Way and Front Street, on the western side of Pembroke Dock. The site is currently derelict, with the foundations of former structures visible on the surface of the concrete slab covering the site. It is surrounded by security fencing and is bounded to the north by a car park, to the east by Western Way and an industrial site (both on reclaimed land), to the south by Front Street and to the west by an historic dock. On the north-western corner of the site gabion baskets provide protection for the reclaimed land, and demonstrate that the site lies around 6m above the former shoreline.

No features of archaeological significance were noted on the site, with only late twentieth/early twenty-first century remains visible.

5. Discussion and Conclusions

The desk-based assessment has revealed that the proposed development site lies within an historically and archaeologically significant area of Pembrokeshire. Sites dating from the medieval period to the modern day are recorded within 2km, including a several Scheduled Ancient Monuments and a large number of Listed Buildings.

Cartographic sources reveal that the proposed development area lies on land reclaimed from the sea around the turn of the twentieth century. Both the Tithe map and the 1st Edition OS map show the site as lying within the inter-tidal zone surrounded by docks. By 1908, the coast between the docks had been extended out into the inter-tidal zone, creating new land that was used for industrial purposes. The proposed development site contained a timber yard that was associated with a saw mill immediately to the south, the two being connected by a short stretch of rail line. Aerial photographs from the mid-twentieth century show the timber yard complete with large industrial buildings, with docks to the east and west and housing to the south. The maps reveal that the site fronted the sea until the later twentieth century when further land reclamation took place and the Western Way and adjacent industrial estates were built.

The proposed development site is built entirely on land reclaimed from the sea at the beginning of the twentieth century and it is therefore considered that the archaeological potential is negligible.

HISTORIC ENVIRONMENT FEATURES

Search criteria:

All HER data for a 2km radius of SM 96722 03782, Pembroke Dock

A search of the regional Historic Environment Record (HER) held by the Dyfed Archaeological Trust has identified the following historic environment features. These are listed and described below. Each feature is allocated a Primary Record Number (PRN) that should be quoted in any correspondence. Where the identification of a site is not certain then all possible interpretations are given in the type field e.g. 'enclosure, henge'. Possible date ranges are also shown in this way in the period field. If a field contains no information then it is either not recorded, not known or not applicable for that site.

Please contact the HER if you have any further questions regarding this information, if you would like any of the sources followed up or if you have information that could improve these records in any way.

SUMMARY

A wooden jetty built circa 1880 to provide a landing stage for vessels deployed by the Trinity House depot for serving and servicing lightships, lighthouses and fleet tankers. The jetty has under-slung rooms for storage and is currently disused. It is in remarkably good condition although the timbers, especially around the windows of the storage rooms, are beginning to fall into disrepair. The Trinity house depot was transferred to Swansea in 1926. RSR December 2002.

SUMMARY

This battery - or gun emplacement survives with its bastion clearly delineated on the ordnance map. The building with is said to be contemporary and its cellars to still contain parts of the Magazine. Dated by Roger Thomas to the period of the American War of Independence - it appears on a map of post 1763 which shows the proposed position of a number of fortifications around the Haven - see PRN 24429. T.A. James. 30:09:1987. The Bath House Redan is an irregular, five sided, artillery fortification built at the outbreak of the American War of Independence to protect an emergency shipyard building frigates for the Royal Navy. SUMMARY

1903-72 Barracks now in use as light industry premises and domestic residence. Large complex of red brick buildings built at the turn of the 20th century to complement an existing hutted camp a further phase of construction occurred during the Second World War. Became surplus to the needs of the MOD in 1967. Sold in 1973. RJC Thomas 1993.

Construction of these red brick built barracks began in 1899 and was completed in 1906. They were intended and seen as modern barracks for the late Victorian imperial army with better quality accommodation for soldiers and their families. They were built on a new site east of Pembroke Dock and replaced the old Defensible Barracks (PRN 4517). Llanion Barracks were declared surplus to military requirements by 1966. The former HQ buildings and officers' mess were taken over by the newly formed South Pembrokeshire District Council and remain in local authority use by Pembrokeshire County Council to this day. HJ & RSR April 1999.

SUMMARY

Pembroke Dock was transferred to the Air Ministry from the Admiralty in 1930 and to begin with there were no hangars, sheds or slipways to accommodate the first flying boats based there. By 1934 hangars and slipways had been constructed and adapted for use by flying boats. From the start of the war Pembroke Dock was part of Coastal Command and the new short 'Sunderland' flying boats were introduced here. Their main role was submarine hunting at which they were by all accounts very successful. In addition they played an important part in D-day, keeping the English channel free of enemy U-boats and protecting the invasion fleet. Whilst the Air Ministry made use of many of the existing naval dockyard buildings those structures that were constructed specifically to accommodate the airforce include a pair of 'B' type hangars, which have recently been restored, a T2 hangar, a jetty and breakwater to shelter the launches used to ferry aircrew to and from the flying boats moored in the haven. These structures relate to the RAF's use of the site and are still intact in 2011, other elements such as the slipways for the flying boats have been lost in the construction for the ferry terminal. A Pyper 2011. On the 1944 Air Ministry map (No. 2710.44) the flying boat base consists of Site No 1 which includes the former dockyard itself, with slipways and technical buildings. Site No 1 lies to the west of Commercial road, to the south divided by Fort road and including the area occupied by the Hospital. In addition there are dispersed sites; Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 and additional requisitioned properties. A. Pyper 2013.

DESCRIPTION

c1930-59, RAF, Coastal Command Station, present use storage and residential. RAF Flying Boat Base opened in 1930 reusing many of the former Royal Dockyard buildings. Barracks and officers mess built in neo-georgian style, two 'B' type hangers. RJC.Thomas, 24.01.92.

SUMMARY

There is some uncertainty as to whether Paterchurch Tower, which now lies within Pembroke Dock dockyard, was domestic or ecclesiastical. It may have formed part of a medieval mansion, ruinous by the early 19th century, and otherwise demolished by mid 19th century. In the 15th century the mansion was occupied by David de Patrickchurch, and in 1422 it passed to Adames of Buckpool, who held it until 1731. However, burials were discovered close to the tower during construction of the dockyard wall in 1844, and the area was known as the Cemetery in 1925. The tower stands to three storeys, with a castellated parapet. There is a vaulted chamber to each floor. K Murphy March 2011, Compiled from several sources.

DESCRIPTION

Substantial, but altered remains of chapelry to Pembroke St Mary parish, with no recorded history. However, appears to have had burial rights - adjoining land was still known as the 'Cemetery' in 1925, when 'burials have been met with during trenching operations' (RCAHM 1925, 288). The chapel appears to have been forgotten by 1800 (ibid.). It appears to have been dedicated to the 'Celtic' St Patrick, but there is no current evidence for an early medieval date. NDL 2003

SUMMARY

Shown on 1st edition OS 6" map of 1881 but not on subsequent editions. A wooden pier extending north eastwards from a causeway constructed from the junction of Lanion and Kingswood Pills. By the time of the publication of the 2nd edition 6" OS map these structures had been replaced by a military rifle range, PRN 37448. An engine shed is marked at the seaward end of the pier, evidently built out across the intertidal saltings of the shallow Lanion Pill in order to gain access to the narrow deep water channel of Cosheston Pill. SUMMARY

The route of the "Burton-Pembroke" ferry is of medieval origins and was probably in use well into the 20th century. The ferry was an essential link in the route between Pembroke and Haverfordwest. The only surviving physical trace of the ferry embarkation point today is a slip down to the waters edge close to the Ferry Inn pub on the Burton side of the river. HJ April 1999.

SUMMARY

A former rubbish tip over saltings within the former Llanion pill, developed from the expansion of settlement at Llanion and Waterloo from the late 19th century. The land was reclaimed in 1984 as part of the Pembroke Dock Enterprise Zone programmes and is now the site of the Cleddau Reach Business Park. Former features and land usage are not individually referenced here, but see 1st & 2nd edition 6" OS maps of 1869 and 1909.

SUMMARY

The Waterloo Quay Industrial Development Project combined with the new waterfront industrial and leisure area known generally as Cleddau Reach covers a large part of what was formerly Llanion Pill (See also PRN 37446 Waterloo Refuse Tip) and is, therefore, largely reclaimed land. This complex has formed a new coastal edge made up of a concrete sea wall and slip way for water access. The development is part of the Pembroke Dock Enterprise Zone created in 1984. The seawall encloses new car parking space. HJ & RSR April 1999.

SUMMARY

A military rifle range assumed to have been established following the construction of Llanion barracks, PRN 24446. A rifle range of 500 & 200 yards is shown on the 2nd edition 6" OS map of 1909 occupying a spur of made ground which has replaced the causeway and wooden pier, PRN 37053. Two target areas are indicated, one 200 yards on the N side of Llanion Pill, the second (marked Target) on the steep wooded west side of the junction of Cosheston Pill and the main Daugleddau channel. The range was presumably short-lived pre-dating as it does the establishment of the Naval oil fuel depot complex, PRN 8451. HJ April 1999.

A quarry, probably for Old Red Sandstone, marked on the 2nd edition 6" OS map of 1909 and situated on the western promontory, within Ferry Wood, at the mouth of Cosheston Pill. The exact location is uncertain from the cartographic evidence, however there is a distinct possibility that the quarry was located on the coast in the cliffs where the naval jetties, PRN 37051 were constructed. SUMMARY

Remnants of a Second World War landing stage for naval vessels. All that remains now are two wooden piles and two concrete bases some 4m apart visible on the pebble shore. Some 10m behind these, however, is a rectangular concrete apron of slightly sloping concrete, measuring circa 65m by 30m which was obviously an integral component of the landing stage arrangement in use during the war. SUMMARY

The village gets its name from the ferry which used to embark from this beach to cross the Cleddau to Pembroke Ferry. On the 1st and 2nd edition 6" Ordnance Survey maps this place was also named Pembroke Ferry. An information panel at the location says that ferrymen used to row children to and from school in Pembroke Dock; also on two days each week Llangwm fisherwomen used to be taken across to sell their fish from here, leaving their donkeys and carts in fields next to the Jolly Sailor public house. The ferry service ceased in the 1950s and all that remains today is a slipway close to the pub. RSR December 2002.

NGR SM97900511 COMMUNITY Burton

CONDITION Intact STATUS None recorded FORM Building

SUMMARY

Trinity House was built in 1861 as the administrative centre of the Trinity House depot, which served and serviced lighthouses, lightships, and fleet tankers. The part of the building visible through the wrought iron gates from the road is two-storeyed and hip-roofed and probably original. It has a three-bayed facade, is rendered, and has a central portico in classical style. There are adjoining wings to the northwest which were not seen during fieldwork. The depot closed in 1926 and its functions and services were transferred to a depot in Swansea. RSR December 2002.

TYPE Bridge PERIOD Modern

NGR SM9743404828 COMMUNITY Pembroke Dock

CONDITION Intact STATUS None recorded FORM Other Structure

SUMMARY

The Cleddau, or Milford Haven, Bridge is a high level box-girder bridge which crosses the Haven at a narrow point between Pembroke Ferry and Barnlake. It carries the A477 Trunk road. There is a supplementary bridge crossing Westfield Pill to the north-west. Construction began in 1968 but was delayed following the collapse of a whole section in June 1970, an accident which took the lives of 4 tradesmen. The tragedy led to a government inquiry into box-girder structures. The bridge was finally opened to all traffic in 1975 with tolls charged to cover the greatly increased costs of construction. HJ April 1999.

DESCRIPTION

This PRN was originally 35003, now the project record number for the 1997-98 Coastal Survey (Lower Milford Haven).

SUMMARY

1928-77, Admiralty Oil Depot. 17 oil tanks, enclosed by earth bunds clustered in one group of two, ? groups of three and two groups of four, protected by eight rock cut bunds. One water tank, a tunnel and a variety of huts and other buildings including mooring dolphins. RJC.Thomas, 24.01.93. The oil tanks have been removed and the site has been levelled and grassed over. It is currently enjoyed by general public as an amenity area. Ferry Wood to the north is still intact as are the jetties (three in all) PRN 37051. RSR April 1999. The former naval oil fuel depot was linked by a tunnel to a deep water jetty (PRN 37051). Its derelict oil tanks were removed in 1984, as part of the developments and improvements on six sites in the Pembroke Dock Enterprise Zone. HJ April 1999.
