Hi Andrew, thanks for the additional information. It's hard to see if it was actually a building from the old maps, if it was it would have been quite an odd position right next to the river, so perhaps it was some kind of enclosure. Either way as you say you will be clear of any remains.
Many thanks
Alice

Hi Alice,

Thank you for the response. I was unaware of this record. On the surface there is no evidence of it at all. Nevertheless I am confident that work will not impact within 20m of the site. I have attached a recent photo – blue arrow shows the location of the old building. The access will be via the gate in the foreground and work will not extend as far up as the old building – the powerlines prevent any access by machinery anyway.

Kind regards
Andrew

Hi Andrew,
Thank you for this consultation and apologies for the delay.
I've checked your proposals against the Historic Environment Record and other sources and have identified one record which may be impacted on by your proposals, particularly in your access route to the river. Please check the location of this site before beginning work. If the site cannot be avoided please come back to us for further advice.

Best wishes
Alice

Hi Alice,

I will be undertaking the project attached between May and September. A small river restoration project (140m approx) that involves inserting some large woody debris into the Pembroke River. I have attached a ppt with the details. The location is land on Windsor farm, near Lamphey, Pembroke, Grid ref is SN 00842 200842 (see below). I've attached location maps, and an aerial photograph showing location and access route. There will be little ground disturbance apart from inserting the debris into the river banks by a tracked vehicle. Can you please confirm as soon as possible that there are no archaeological designations, features or records for this immediate area. I do not believe there are but I would be grateful for confirmation.
